Devise of house to A. & B., & to their children, & if they have not any, to C. & his children; the furniture to go with the house. A. & B. had no children at the date of the will:—Held: having regard to the terms of the will, & particularly to the direction as to the furniture, to apply the rule in Wild's Case, No. 8728, ante, & thereby give A. & B. estates tail, would defeat the intention of testatrix; in such case it was not imperative to apply the rule; & A. & B. took the house & furniture for their respective lives, with remainder to the children of each coming into esse during such lives.—GRIEVE v. GRIEVE (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 180; 36 L. J. Ch. 932; 16 L. T. 201; 15 W. R. 577.

8743. Child en ventre sa mère—Born after testator's death.]—Testator devised as follows: "I give & bequeath unto my dear wife, M. P., all my estate of land, situate, etc., for her natural life; & after her decease, I give & bequeath the same unto my daughter M., wife of A. R., to her & her children for ever." At the date of the will & of the death of testator, the daughter M. was enceinte of a daughter, who was born after testator's death. She had afterwards other children, who survived:—Held: testator's daughter, M. took an estate tail.

The rule of construction, now commonly called the rule in Wild's Case, No. 8728, ante, is to this effect: "Where lands are devised to a person & his children, & he has no child at the time of the devise, the parent takes an estate tail, for, it is said, the intent of the devisor is manifest & certain that the children, or issue, should take, & as immediate devisees they cannot take, because they are not in rerum natura; & by way of remainder they cannot take, for that was not his (the devisor's) intent, for the gift is immediate. & therefore such words shall be taken as words of limitation." In this case, M. R. had no children in existence at the date of the will (Aug. 1, 1806), or after testator's death (in Nov. 1806). It is true that she had a child born on Jan. 14, 1807, which child must therefore have been en ventre sa mère at both the preceding periods; but it seems impossible to suppose that testator can really & in fact have treated this unborn child as the immediate object of the devise jointly with the mother; &, were it otherwise, one child would be insufficient to satisfy the word "children," in the plural, & consequently the words used appear to come strictly within the principle of Wild's Case, No. 8728, ante (KELLY, C.B.).—ROPER v. ROPER (1867), L. R. 3 C. P. 32; 37 L. J. C. P. 7; 17 L. T. 286; 16 W. R. 253, Ex. Ch.

8779. —— ——.]—Testator gave all his real & personal estate to his wife for the use & benefit of herself & all his children, whether born of his former or of his then present wife, & he appointed his wife, & three other persons his exors.:—Held: the wife & children took as joint tenants.

The ct. will lay hold of every small circumstance to support the conclusion that testator intended what the ct., upon some presumed rule, conceives to be his most natural intention a priori, & will modify such a bequest into a bequest to the wife for life with remainder to the children. . . .

If it were to be laid down as a general rule that, although a gift to A., B., & C., is a gift in joint tenancy, that construction is not to apply to a gift to a wife & children, it would be another matter; but if the change of construction is to depend on the circumstances, I confess that I cannot find any circumstances on the face of the will which lead me to the conclusion that testator meant anything more than he said (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—NEWILL v. NEWILL (1872), 7 Ch. 8780. —— ——.]—Testator devised & bequeathed all his real & personal estate to B. for life, & after her decease to P. for life subject to a forfeiture in a certain event, & the will proceeded: "& from & after the decease of" P., "I give & bequeath the property so given & belonging to" P. "for life to my ward" E. "& to any lawful issue she may have, such issue to take a vested interest in my property upon attaining the age of twenty-one years." Testator died possessed of real & personal estate. E. survived testator & died intestate without having been married:—Held: (1) the direction that the issue should take vested interests was inconsistent with the use of the word "issue" as a term of limitation, & consequently E.'s issue took as purchasers, & her heir-at-law was entitled to the real estate; (2) as to the personal estate E. & her issue, had she had any, would have taken concurrently as joint tenants, & consequently her legal personal representative was entitled to the personalty.

Under a gift of personalty to A. & his children the parent & children take primâ facie concurrently as joint tenants, but slight circumstances have been laid hold of by the cts. as enabling them to come to the conclusion that a gift for life to A. with remainder to his children was intended (STIRLING, J.).—Re WILMOT, WILMOT v. BETTERTON (1897), 76 L. 8794. Devise of realty with power of sale—Gift of purchase-money to children.]—Testator devised a farm to his two sons, with permission to dispose of it to certain persons, if they thought proper ; but, if it should not be sold, he bequeathed it, after the decease of either of his sons, to the survivor, & directed that, after the death of both, it should be sold, & the money divided equally between the children of his sons :—Held : the sons were only joint tenants for life with a power of sale ; they could make a good title, & give discharges for the purchase money ; they were joint tenants for life of the purchase-money ; &, upon the death of the survivor, it would devolve to their children.—BREEDON v. BREEDON (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 413 ; 8 L. J. O. S. Ch. 104 ; 39 E. R. 159.

8795. Direction that all property should be at disposal of wife for herself & children."]—Testator, by his will, directed that all his property should be "at the disposal of his wife, for herself & children" : —Held : there was no joint tenancy between the widow & children ; but the widow, though not entitled to the property absolutely, had a personal interest in it ; &, as between herself & her children, was either a trustee of the fund with a large discretion as to the application of it, or she had a power in favour of the children subject to a life interest in herself.

I have not been referred to, nor have I found, any case in which the terms of a gift of personalty have been the same as in this will, but there are many in which rules & principles have been established, which appear to me to lead to the conclusion that the children do not take interests in possession in the property as joint tenants with their mother, which would give the same effect to the words used as if the gift had been simply to the mother & her children, although even in such a gift a very slight indication of intention that the children should not take jointly with the mother, has been thought sufficient to enable the ct. to decree a life estate to the mother with remainder to her children (LORD COTTENHAM, C.). —CROCKETT v. CROCKETT (1848), 2 Ph. 553 ; 17 L. 8845. Whether issue construed as word of limitation.]—A. by her will says, I give to my nieces F. & B. each one-half of the produce of bank stock & to their issue, & if either shall happen to die before the legacy became due to her, & leave no issue, the share of her so dying shall go to the survivor. F. died before the testatrix, leaving a son, who has brought his bill for a moiety of the produce of the bank stock. The words "leave no issue" confine it to F.'s leaving no issue at the time of her death, & are relative to any child the legatee might have at her death, & therefore a moiety of the produce of the bank stock was decreed to the son of F.

The word issue is capable of three senses. In one sense as a word of description to take in joint tenancy; in another as a word of limitation; & in a third as a description of the person in remainder (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—LAMPLEY v. BLOWER (1746), 3 Atk. 396; 26 E. R. 1028, L. C.

A similar decision made with respect to personal estate.

The word "issue" is a word of limitation if the context of the will does not afford sufficient reasons to construe it otherwise (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—TATE v. CLARKE (1838), 1 Beav. 100; 8 L. J. Ch. 60; 48 E. R. 876.

To say that the limitation to the issue male of the nephew, was used by testator as words of limitation, is equivalent to saying that it was used by testator for the purpose of describing the quantity of interest he intended the nephews to take (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—HARVEY v. TOWELL (1847), 7 Hare, 231; 17 L. of personalty " issue " is not primâ facie a word of limitation, & the question whether it is so is purely one of construction on each particular instrument.

(2) The words " & their issue " or " & their respective issue " can be construed as an alternative gift, although such gift is an original & not a substitutional one.

A testator directed his real & personal estate to be sold at a certain period & equally divided amongst his then surviving children & their respective issue :—Held : " issue " was not a word of limitation ; the gift to the issue, though original, was alternative ; & the property was divisible per stirpes among the children of testator who survived the period of distribution & the surviving issue of children who had predeceased it.

The reason is that an estate tail in the ancestor is the only way of providing for all the issue of the ancestor, & the cts. have assumed that in a devise to one & his issue the whole line of issue is intended. . . . The word " issue " may in gifts of personal property be a word of limitation no one doubts, but, in my judgment, whether it be so or not is purely a question of construction on each particular instrument, the ct. which has to interpret such instrument being unfettered by any general rule. . . .

Lastly, do the children & issue of children surviving at the period of distribution take per capita, the issue competing with their parents, or can I read the words " & their respective issue " as an alternative gift to the issue only of children who predecease the period of distribution ? It should be noticed that, if the words can be read as an alternative gift, such gift will be an original & not a substitutional gift, for no child can take unless he or she survives the period of distribution. There would appear to be no great difficulty in reading such words as " & their issue " or " & their respective issue " as an alternative & substitutional gift (PARKER, J.).—Re COULDEN, COULDEN v. COULDEN, [1908] 1 Ch. 320 ; 77 L. (2) There is nothing in the decisions relative to the limitations of personal estate by which an absolute interest has been held to be given to the first taker, which obliges the ct. in construing bequests of personalty, where technical words are not used & the interest of the first taker is expressly confined to a life-estate, to act on principles derived from laws of tenure & not resting on intention.—Re WYNCH'S TRUSTS, Ex p. WYNCH (1854), 5 De G. The word issue in a will, is either a word of purchase or of limitation, as will best effectuate the intention of testator; it is a plural word, & takes in all the sons of G., & the words "issue male of his body & the heirs male of his body of such issue," mean only that they were not all to take at a time but in succession, as if he had said to his first, & every other son, etc., as to the scratching out the word heirs, I lay no stress at all upon that, because testator's chief & predominant intent was clearly that the lands should go in succession to all the sons of G. What I have to consider is, whether there is anything in the will which makes the condition a condition precedent, for it is not to be so construed unless it was clearly so intended. Some cases were cited, which show that the ct. is not disposed to construe a condition as a condition precedent unless absolutely compelled to do so; & I find nothing in this will to compel me so to construe the present condition. I think that no greater force can be given to the words "already or hereafter to be born" than to the words "born or hereafter to be born" (without the word "already"), or to other like expressions, which from the time of LORD COKE to this day have been held to mean children living at testator's death, to the exclusion of such as may have previously died. To produce the effect contended for, words more distinct, such as "now living," or the like, would be necessary. The true construction of these words is simply "born or hereafter to be born," which includes only children living at the death of testator (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—WOODHOUSE v. HERRICK (1855), 1 K. & J. 352; 3 Eq. 8904. —— Effect of gift of intermediate rents & profits.]—Even in the case of a mere legacy, which would upon the terms of the gift be contingent on the legatee's attaining a certain age, it may become vested by the gift of the income or interest in the meantime. . . . It is well settled, that as to real estate the purpose for which the intermediate rents & profits are given or carved out, does not prevent the vesting ; & it is also well decided by the authorities . . . that where freehold & leasehold estates are included in the same gift, & by words which give an immediate vested interest as to the freehold, the leasehold estates must be considered as vested also (STUART, V.-C.).—JAMES v. WYNFORD (LORD) (1852), 1 Sm. & G. 40 ; 22 L. 8905. —— Early vesting.]—Testator devised his real & personal estate to trustees to convert & invest, & pay the income to his daughter for life, & after her decease to divide the fund among "all her children then living," provided all such children may then have attained twenty-one ; if not, he directed the fund to be placed out at interest, & the interest, etc., to be applied for the maintenance & bringing up of all such children, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, when the fund was to be divided amongst such children as should be then living, & the issue of such of them as should be dead, the issue to take their parents' share :—Held : a child who survived the mother, attained twenty-one, but died before the youngest attained twenty-one, took an absolute vested interest.

8907. —.]—Considering how many very strong decisions there are for construing wills so as to favour early vesting, their Lordships are by no means prepared to say that this alone would not be a sufficient ground for modifying the sense of the words of the preamble. But when it is found that testator has declared his intention to be that his daughter, if he has one, should, on marrying with the consent of his widow, & consequently in her lifetime, take a vested interest in the rest of the real estate & the personal estate, to put the construction on that preamble that this possible daughter shall take nothing till the widow dies, is not merely an absurdity, but a repugnance & inconsistency such as to justify a modification of the words of the preamble so far as to avoid these consequences (LORD BLACKBURN).—RHODES v. RHODES (1882), 7 App. Cas. 192 ; 51 L. B. Use by Testator of Word "Vest."

8916. Whether interpreted as "vested in interest."]—Testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of a fund, after the death of his daughter, upon trust for all & every the child & children of his said daughter, equally to be divided amongst them, the shares of such of them as should be sons to be paid at twenty-one, & of such of them as should be daughters at twenty-one or marriage; & if there should be only one such child, then the whole to such one child; & testator declared that if there should be no child of his said daughter who should live to acquire a vested interest in the fund, then the fund should go as his daughter should appoint. Testator had in several parts of his will used the word "vested," in its ordinary legal sense:—Held: it must have its ordinary legal signification in the clause giving the power of appointment to the daughter, in the event therein mentioned, & it controlled the terms of the trust for the children, & they took a vested interest in the fund, not at their birth, but at the time directed for payment.—MATTHEWS v. JOULE (1859), 33 L. T. O. S. 99.

8917. ——.]—Testator by his will in 1801, gave all his "moiety" of an estate to his daughter M. for life, remainder to her sons successively in tail, remainder to her daughter without words of limitation, & "in default of such issue" to A. in fee. By a codicil in 1803, testator after reciting that he had by his will given the reversion in fee of the property, expectant on the decease of M. "without issue of her body," to A., declared that if A. died without issue before the estate became "vested" in him by virtue of the limitations aforesaid, he gave it to other persons:—Held: the word "vested" in the codicil meant vested in interest, & therefore, as A. survived testator, the substitutionary gift in the codicil did not take effect.—Re ARNOLD'S ESTATE (1863), 33 Beav. 163; 9 L. T. 530; 9 Jur. N. S. 1186; 12 W. R. 4; 55 E. R. 329.

Annotation:—Folld. Richardson v. Power (1865), 19 C. B. N. S. 780.

8918. -.]—Testator by his will devised certain real estates to his daughter H. for life, & after her death to her sons successively in tail, &, in default of such issue, to his son J. in fee. By a codicil, testator, after reciting that "he had by his will devised the reversion in fee in several estates, expectant on the decease of his several daughters, including H., to his son J.," & that "he had devised other estates to trustees to the use of his said son until he should attain the age of twenty-five years, & thereupon to him & his assigns for ever," declared his will to be, "that, in case his said son should happen to depart this life without leaving lawful issue of his body living at his decease, & before the said several estates should become vested in him by virtue of the said several limitations aforesaid," the said estates should go to such of his daughters as should then be living, & to the issue of such of them as should then be dead, in the manner therein mentioned. Testator died in 1804: J. attained twenty-five, & died in 1844, without having had issue: & testator's daughter H. died unmarried in 1864:—Held: "vested," in the codicil, meant "vested in interest," & consequently, on the death of testator, the estates vested immediately in the son J., subject to the estates limited to the daughter H. & her issue, & the devisees of J. took.—RICHARDSON v. POWER (1865), 19 C. B. N. S. 780; 35 L. J. C. P. 44; 11 Jur. N. S. 739; 13 W. R. 1104; 144 E. R. 994, Ex. Ch.

8919. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his real & personal estate in trust, after the death or second marriage of his widow, for his children who might be then living & the issue of any who should have previously died, such issue to take the share of their deceased parent in equal shares, the shares of such of testator's children or grandchildren as should be sons to become vested & payable when they should respectively attain twenty-four, & as to the shares of his daughters or the female issue of any deceased child upon trust for their separate use for life, & after the decease of his daughters or granddaughters upon trust for their issue as they should appoint, & in default of appointment for their children who should be living at their respective deaths & should attain twenty-four, & in case either of his daughters or granddaughters should die under twenty-four without leaving issue or leaving issue all such issue should die under twenty-four then the shares of such daughters or granddaughters should be divided equally among all testator's children who should be then living & be payable upon the same terms as their original shares; & the will contained a power after the death of the widow to apply the income of the contingent shares of the respective children & issue aforesaid for their maintenance:—Held: "vested" was to be read in its proper sense.—HALE v. HALE (1876), 3 Ch. 8916 iii. ——.]—On the construction of a will:—Held: the word "vest" must be interpreted in its primary meaning, & could not be construed as share alike, & directed that the bequest made to the brothers & sisters of his wife, as aforesaid, who were then nine in number, should be deemed vested interests in them. All the brothers & sisters survived testator, but only two of them survived his wife :—Held : only the survivors of the wife took under the will, notwithstanding the words relating to vesting.—DRAYCOTT v. WOOD (1856), 28 L. 8922. —— ——.]—Where a legacy was given to the children of A. in remainder, after life interest to A., & her husband, the shares of daughters " to be vested " at twenty-one & of sons at twenty-five subject to a gift over :—Held : on an examination of the whole will, " vested " meant " indefeasible," & consequently the gift over only was void for remoteness.

The word " vested " is open to a considerable latitude of meaning . . . the word is capable of being construed as " indefeasibly vested " if the whole of the scope of the will so require, & in that sense testator may have meant to use it. Otherwise its strict & ordinary meaning is " vested in point of interest " (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re BAXTER'S TRUSTS (1864), 4 New Rep. 131 ; 10 L. T. 487 ; 10 Jur. N. S. 845.

8923. —— ——.]—In the construction of the will of testatrix in this matter the ct. read a declaration that funds bequeathed by the will should not be paid to or become vested interests in the beneficiaries until they attained twenty-five, as meaning only that they should not be paid to or become " indefeasibly vested " interests in the beneficiaries until they attained that age.—Re EDMONDSON'S ESTATE (1868), L. 8924. —— ——.]—Testator directed the trustees of his will to hold a certain fund in trust " for my child, if only one, or for all my children, if more than one, in equal shares, & so that the interest of a son or sons shall be absolutely vested at the age of twenty-one years, & of a daughter or daughters at that age or marriage " :—Held : the shares of the children were on the death of testator vested in interest though subject to be divested. " Vest " may, if the context of the will is in favour of that construction, be read as importing only that the interest previously vested is at a specified time to become absolute & indefeasible.—ARMYTAGE v. WILKINSON (1878), 3 App. Cas. 355 ; 47 L. J. P. C. 31 ; 26 W. R. 559 ; sub nom. ARMYTAGE v. MASTER IN EQUITY OF THE SUPREME COURT OF VICTORIA, 38 L. T. 185, P. C.

8925. —— ——.]—The word " vested " primâ facie means vested in interest, but by force of a context it may have a different meaning, such as " vested in possession " or " indefeasibly vested " or " payable " (STIRLING, J.).—Re STEVENS, CLARK v. STEVENS (1896), 40 Sol. Jo. 296.

8926. —— Or " fall into possession."]—Where testator gives a life estate in his funds, & at the expiration thereof gives the principal to be divided among several, & if any die then to the survivors, without specifying the time of survivorship, he is held to mean the contingency to extend over the whole period which elapses before the time of distribution or expiration of the life estate, unless the context points out another time ; in other words, the legacy does not vest till the death of the tenant for life. Therefore where A. by will, gave a life estate to B., & at B.'s death to six persons equally, declaring that " if any die without issue before his share vests, the same shall belong equally to the survivors," there was nothing in the word " vest " to prevent the application of the above rule.

The word " vest " means primâ facie " come into possession," & not " accrue in point of interest."—RICHARDSON v. ROBERTSON (1862), 6 L. T. 75, H. L.

8927. —— ——.]—Testatrix gave a legacy of £4,000, " payable " at the decease of A. to a class of persons, to be equally divided amongst them, share & share alike, the shares to be " vested " interests on majority or marriage, & the income in the event of A.'s death in the meantime, to be paid towards the maintenance & education of such persons. There was no gift over. Two of the class survived A., & died under twenty-one :—Held : by the word " vested " was meant " vested in possession " & the shares of the deceased minors passed to their legal personal representatives.—SIMPSON v. PEACH (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 208 ; 42 L. J. Ch. 816 ; 28 L. T. 731 ; 21 W. R. 728.

8928. —— ——.]—The use of the word " vest " does not indicate an intention on the part of testator to impose a condition on a bequest that the legatee shall survive the tenant for life.—SAMARADIWAKARA v. DE SARAM, [1911] A. C. 753 ; 81 L. J. P. C. 75 ; 105 L. T. 345, P. C.

8929. Modified interpretation—Where justified by context.]—A devise of real estate to the four sons of testator as tenants in common, & a bequest of residuary personal estate, in trust for the same four sons, in like manner, to be vested in them as to one moiety as they should respectively attain twenty-one years of age, & as to the other moiety when the youngest should attain that age, & in case any son should die before the respective moieties of his share should become vested, then the unvested share which should belong to the son so dying, & also his accrued share, to go to the others of testator's sons as tenants in common, & to become vested at the times aforesaid ; & in case all his sons should die under twenty-one, then to testator's right heirs ; & testator appointed his exors. guardians of his sons, & empowered such guardians to receive the rents & profits of the respective shares of his sons in the said real estate during their minorities, for their maintenance, education, & advancement :—Held : the sons took an immediate & vested interest in their respective shares in the real & personal estate, but liable to be devested by their death before the time at which testator declared they should respectively be vested, payable or transferable.

Testator afterwards made a codicil to his will in these words, to the effect following: "Having some short time back drawn my pen through the first fifteen lines of the sixth sheet of my will, & being apprehensive that such rasure not being witnessed, might lead to litigation, I declare that the sole intention of such rasure is, to revoke that part only of the will, whereby I direct the sale of my freehold property; & I hereby direct & appoint, that the son of my daughter A. who shall first attain the age of twenty-one years, shall on attaining that age change his name to Elwes; & I give & devise to the said son of A. on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, & changing his name to Elwes, all my freehold property, lands, tenements, & hereditaments, to hold to my said grandson, his heirs, & assigns, etc.; & I do hereby ratify & confirm the said will, except as before is excepted":—Held: the will was revoked by the codicil, expressly as to the power of sale; & as to the corpus of the lands at S. & H. by the effect of inconsistency of devise, but the will was unrevoked & operative in all other respects; & under the devise by the effect of the will & codicil, no estate in the lands at S. & H. & the other freehold estates, was vested, but remained contingent upon the event of sons or daughters of testator's daughter, according to the limitations of the will, living to attain the age of twenty-one, etc.; & until such vesting upon such event, or until such event should become impossible, the estate in the lands vested in the trustees, & the rents & profits were applicable according to the trusts of the will.

The judges from the earliest times were always inclined to decide that estates devised were vested, & it has long been an established rule for the guidance of the Cts. of W. in construing devises, that all estates are to be held to be vested except estates in the devise of which a condition precedent to the vesting is so clearly expressed that the cts. cannot treat them as vested, without deciding in direct opposition to the terms of the will. If there be the least doubt advantage is to be taken of the circumstance occasioning that doubt & what seems to make a condition is held to have only the effect of postponing the right to possession (BEST, C.J.).

Whilst estates remain contingent, those in whom they are at a future time to be vested have no interest in the estates or the rents & profits of such estates. . . . If the parents attaining a certain age, be a condition precedent to the vesting estates by the death of their parents, before they are of that age, children lose estates which were intended for them (BEST, C.J.).—DUFFIELD v. DUFFIELD (1829), 3 Bli. 8957. ——.]—Testator gave his real & personal estates to trustees, & directed them to invest his personal estate in the purchase of land, & to pay the rents, subject to certain annuities, to his son, for life; & in case his son should die, leaving behind him no legitimate issue, then he directed the trustees to pay the rents to his, testator's widow for life; but in case his son should die leaving behind him legitimate issue, then, at the end of six months after the eldest male child then living of his son, should have attained twenty-five, or, in default of male issue, the eldest female child then living of his son, should have attained twenty-one, to convey all the estates to the eldest male child, or, in default of male issue, to the eldest female child & to his or her heirs of his or her body lawfully begotten, absolutely for ever. Testator then, in case his son should die during the minority of such eldest male or female child, provided for their maintenance out of the rents until he or she should attain the respective ages before mentioned, & then declared that, in case his son should not die during such minority, his estates should continue on the trusts aforesaid until six months after his son's death, & then pass to his son's eldest male or female child in manner before expressed; & in case his son should die leaving no legitimate issue, then that the trustees should, after the death of testator's wife, convey the estates to certain other persons. Testator's son married, & had a son born after testator's death. The ct. held the trust for the grandson not to be void for remoteness; & the grandson having survived his father & attained twenty-one, but being under twenty-five, & all the annuitants being dead, ordered the estates to be conveyed to him.—JACKSON v. MARJORIBANKS (1841), 12 Sim. 93; 5 Jur. 885; 59 E. R. 1066.

8958. ——.]—Testator being seised in fee of certain messuages, lands, etc., devised them to trustees to the use of his granddaughter M. for her life, & "after her decease to the use of all & every the child or children of her, M., who shall attain the age of twenty-one years," as tenants in common in fee; "& for want of any issue," he devised them over to other parties, to hold them in a similar manner. Testator died in 1824, leaving his granddaughter M. him surviving. M. married in 1825, & died in 1833, leaving three children, who were infants at the time of her death:—Held: (1) the granddaughter being tenant for life, with remainder in fee to such of her children as should attain twenty-one years, & no child having attained that age at her death, the remainders were divested, & the children took no interest in the estate devised; (2) the contingent remainders over were likewise divested, & the estate vested in the heir-at-law.

It was contended . . . that they took vested estates in fee immediately on the death of their mother, subject only to be divested in the event of their dying under twenty-one, & this case, it was said, must be treated as coming within the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Phipps v. Akers, No. 8993, post, & the several cases there referred to. To this, however, we cannot accede. In all those cases there was an absolute gift to some ascertained person or persons, & the ct. held, that words accompanying the gift, although apparently importing a contingency or contingencies, did in reality only indicate certain circumstances on the happening or not happening of which the estate previously devised should be divested & pass from the first devisee into some other channel. . . . Here there is no gift to any one who does not answer the whole of the requisite description (ROLFE, B.).—FESTING v. ALLEN (1843), 12 M. & W. 279; 13 L. J. Ex 74; 2 L. T. O. S. 150; 152 E. At testator's decease M. was living & had no son who had attained twenty-five, but his eldest son attained that age during the lives of the widow & H. This son died in the lifetime of H. without having taken the name & arms of testator:—Held: (1) the limitation to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years could not be treated as intended to give an immediately vested interest liable to be divested on death under twenty-five, but was a limitation contingent on the son's attaining the age of twenty-five years; (2) when the legal estate in fee vested in trustees under the instrument which created the beneficial limitations, the feudal rule by which a contingent remainder failed if it did not vest before the determination of the particular estate, did not apply, & the limitation to such son of M. as should attain twenty-five years, assuming it to have been an equitable remainder, would still have been void for remoteness; (3) the direction to the trustees to convey on the death of H. did not create a contingent equitable remainder, but was an executory devise.—ABBISS v. BURNEY, Re FINCH (1881), 17 Ch. The will contained no direction as to the application of the rents of the house after the death of E., & during the infancy of her children. The widow died in 1911, & the younger daughter in 1912, under twenty-seven years of age. The elder granddaughter, not yet 8971. —— Direction against vested interest until age attained.]—Testator devised a freehold estate to his wife for her widowhood, remainder to his nephew for life, remainder to the children of his nephew in fee, as tenants in common, & if there should be no child of his nephew living at his wife's death or second marriage, then over; &, by a codicil of even date with the will, he directed that neither his nephew nor any issue of his nephew should take a vested interest by virtue of his will, unless they should respectively attain twenty-one; & in case of the death of any of such children under twenty-one, their shares should go to the survivors on their attaining twenty-one. The nephew attained twenty-one, & had five infant children living at the widow's death:—Held: their interests were contingent on their attaining twenty-one.—RUSSEL v. BUCHANAN (1836), 7 Sim. 628; 5 L. When the particular estate upon which a remainder depends may determine before the remainder takes effect, the remainder is contingent. 8994. ——.]—Testator devised his estate at E. to trustees, upon trust to apply the rents for the maintenance & support of B. till she should attain the age of twenty-five years, or marry with consent, & to lay out the surplus of such rents in Government securities, that the same might accumulate for the uses & purposes of his will: & from & after B. should attain twenty-five, or marry with consent, then to pay her the whole of the rents for her life; &, after her decease, upon trust for her children. Testator then gave his estate at I. to the same trustees, upon trust, in case B. should live to attain twenty-five, or marry with such consent as aforesaid, to permit her to occupy & enjoy & receive the rents of that estate for her life; &, after her decease, upon trust for her children, in the manner before mentioned. Provided that, in case B. should marry without consent, testator revoked all the devises & bequests in favour of her & her issue. All the residue of his real & personal estate, & likewise his estate & premises thereinbefore devised for the benefit of B., in case she should die under twenty-five, unmarried, & without issue, testator devised & bequeathed to the trustees, in trust for X., Y. & Z. B. attained twenty-five & married with consent. Between the death of testator & her attaining twenty-five there was an accumulation of the surplus rents of the E. estate, after providing for her maintenance, & an accumulation of the rents of the I. estate:—Held: she was entitled for her life to the income of the former accumulation, & absolutely entitled to the latter accumulation.—GREENE v. POTTER (1846), 2 Ph. & C. certain specific & pecuniary bequests, testator, as to "all the rest, residue, & remainder" of his "estate & effects," gave & bequeathed the same to the same trustees, "their heirs," exors., administrators, & assigns, upon trust to lay out & invest the same, or the produce thereof, as therein mentioned, as they should think fit, & hold his residuary estate upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore declared with respect to his real estate, or as near thereto as the rules of law & equity would permit. Testator died in 1834. One of the daughters, who married in 1835, died in 1851, leaving an only child, a son, W., who did not attain twenty-one until 1860. In a suit of Holmes v. Prescott, No. 9006, ante, upon the same will, it had been incidentally held that the limitation of each daughter's share in the freehold estates to her child & children being contingent, the remainder to W. failed for want of a particular estate to support it:—Held: the limitation over of the same share, if there should be no such child, being also a contingent remainder, also failed, & the reversion in such share, after the death of the daughter, passed under the residuary clause in the same will, & did not descend to the heir.—PERCEVAL v. PERCEVAL (1870), L. The daughter D. survived testator, & she afterwards married & had three children, but she died before any of them had attained twenty-one:—Held: by reason of the direction that testator's debts should be paid, the trustees took the whole legal estate in fee simple in the specifically devised estate, & consequently the contingent remainder to the children of the daughter had not failed by reason of the determination of her life estate before the happening of the contingency.—MARSHALL v. GINGELL (1882), 21 Ch. 9018. ——.]—Testator, by his will dated in 1851, after making divers specific devises & bequests, & giving a life interest to his wife in his residuary real estate, devised such residuary real estate, after the death of his wife, to his trustees in trust for his grandson during his life, & from &

after his decease in trust for " all & every his child & children who shall attain the age or respective ages of twenty-one years, & his, her, or their heirs & assigns for ever " ; but in case there should be no child of his grandson who should attain the age of twenty-one years, then, as to the same residuary real estate, upon trusts over as in the will mentioned. The will contained a gift of the residuary personal estate, but it was distinct from the above devise, & upon different trusts from those declared concerning the real estate, although some of the trusts were the same. The will also contained powers for the trustees to grant leases, & apply the rents & profits of the real estate in making repairs. Testator died in 1853, & his widow died in 1866. The grandson died in Oct. 1867, leaving an only child, who was born on Feb. 11, 1864. The question arose whether the accumulated rents, accruing between the date of the death of testator's grandson & the time when the grandson's only child attained the age of twenty-one years, were undisposed of by the will, or passed to such child :—Held : the gift to the grandson's child was a contingent remainder, & not a vested remainder, & subject to being divested. —Re WILLIAMS, SPENCER v. BRIGHOUSE (1886), 54 L. 9014. ——.]—S. devised hereditaments of which he was seised in fee simple to his son R. for the term of his natural life, & " from & immediately after his decease unto & to the use of all & every his children which shall then be living, & of their respective heirs & assigns for ever as tenants in common " ; & in case his son R. should happen to die without leaving lawful issue, or leaving such, & all of them should happen to die under the age of twenty-one years without issue, then to his son T. & to his two daughters & their respective heirs & assigns for ever as tenants in common ; & he devised all other his real estate whatsoever & wheresoever to his son R. & his heirs & assigns for ever. R. survived testator, & married in July, 1826. In Jan. 1827, he demised by lease & release all his estate in the devised hereditaments. On June 3, 1887, a son of the marriage was born :— Held : the son so born, as soon as he was begotten, took a vested remainder liable to open & let in the interests of after-born children & subject only to be divested in the event of his death under the age of twenty-one, & the life estate of R. & his remainder in fee did not merge so as to extinguish the intermediate estate of the children.—SULLEY v. BARBER (1888), 59 L. The will also provided that if & so long as some son, living at testator's death, of his son W. should be living, but the property should not have become absolutely vested beneficially in any such son, the trustee should at the expense of the residuary estate maintain the house & keep up an establishment there, & allow the same to be used or enjoyed by any of the persons for the time being entitled in expectancy thereto. Testator died in 1919. His two sons survived him. W. had four sons living at testator's death, the eldest of them being then thirteen years of age :—Held : the interests of the grandsons were contingent, & until one of them should have attained the age of twenty-one or all of them should have died without attaining that age, W. & J. were entitled to the intermediate rents & profits of the property.— Re ASTOR, ASTOR v. ASTOR, [1922] 1 Ch. 364 ; sub nom. Re ASTOR (VISCOUNT), ASTOR v. ADAMS, 91 L. J. Ch. 277, C. A.

9016. ——.]—(1) Testator devised his real estate, subject to certain interests, in favour of his wife during her widowhood, upon trust for the eldest of his sons, if any, " who shall be living at the time of my death absolutely upon his attaining the age of twenty-one years," &, failing such son, then he directed that same should be held upon the trusts concerning his residuary estate. Testator died in Oct. 1912, leaving one son & three daughters, all of whom were infants. Testator's widow remarried in 1917. The trustees had accumulated certain of the rents & profits of the real estate. Questions having arisen owing to the claims for super tax in respect of the income of the son, a summons was taken out for the purpose of having it determined what interest the son took, on the death of testator, in the real estate :— Held : the son became, on testator's death, entitled to the real estate, contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, & also took a like interest in the accumulations.

(2) The ct. is inclined rather to hold an estate to be vested than contingent if the words of the will will allow it to do so (WARRINGTON, L.J.).— Re BLACKWELL, BLACKWELL v. BLACKWELL, [1926] Ch. 223 ; 95 L. J. Ch. 172 ; 134 L. T. 367 ; 70 Sol. Jo. 366, C. A.

9017. —— Disrection for accumulation until attainment of age.]—Devise of real estate to trustees in fee, upon trust for J. for life, & after his death upon trust for his children who should attain twenty-one, & the issue of any child who should die under twenty-one leaving issue who should attain that age ; but, in case there should be no child, nor the issue of any child of J. who should attain twenty-one, the property was to be held on trust for the child or children of R. who should respectively attain twenty-one, if more than one in equal shares. Provided always, that the rents of the trust premises should, during the term of twenty-one years from the day next before the day of testator's death, be accumulated by way of compound interest, & the accumulated fund should be held in trust for the child, if only one, or all the children equally, if more than one, of R. who should attain twenty-one. J. died without ever having had a child. R. had six children who attained twenty-one. The youngest of them was born after the eldest had attained twenty-one, but before the end of the period of accumulation :— Held : all the children of R. who were born during the period of accumulation, & who attained twenty-one, were entitled under the gift over.—WATSON v. YOUNG (1885), 28 Ch. 9019. ——.]—Testator devises his lands charged with two annuities, & subject to certain legacies, to trustees, their heirs & assigns, until his nephew J., son of his sister M., should attain twenty-one; & if he should die in the meantime, until H. second son of M. should arrive at that age; & if H. should die in the meantime, until the daughter of M. should arrive at that age, upon trust to raise out of the rents of the premises, or by sale or mtge. thereof, portions for H. & the younger children of M. payable on their attaining twenty-one; & further, to apply a proper sum out of the rents for the maintenance & education of J. until he should attain twenty-one, & then to pay him the residue; & if he should die before twenty-one, then to apply a like sum for the maintenance of H. till he should attain that age, & then to pay him the residue; & in the meantime to place out the money arising from the rent at interest, for the benefit of J. & when J. should attain twenty-one, or in case of his death, when & as soon as H. should arrive at that age, or in case of his death, when the daughter of M. should attain twenty-one, to the use of J. & his assigns for life, without impeachment of waste; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; & after the death of J. to the use of his first & other sons & daughters in strict tail; & for default of such issue, to the use of H. with similar limitations over to his niece, the daughter of M. & an ultimate remainder to M. in fee. Testator died, leaving his sister M. her sons, J. & H. & three younger children alive. J. married & died intestate under twenty-one, leaving a daughter:—Held: on the death of the testator, J. took a vested estate for life; H. took, at testator's death, a vested estate for life in remainder, expectant on the death of his brother J. & failure of sons & daughters to be born to J. & issue male of such sons & daughters.—WARTER v. HUTCHINSON (1823), 1 B. & C. 721; 3 Dow. & Ry. 9020. ——.]—Testator devised personalty to trustees, to pay debts, & invest the surplus, & to receive the interest, & pay it to his wife during her life & widowhood, & afterwards to apply the interest, or a sufficient part, to the maintenance of his daughter I., until she should attain the age of twenty-five, & then to pay & assign the principal & unapplied interest to her; but, in case she should happen to die before attaining that age, leaving lawful issue, then in trust to pay same to such issue, share & share alike, if more than one, as soon as they should respectively attain twenty-one, & to pay the interest towards their maintenance in the meantime; but, in case I. should happen to die under twenty-five, & without leaving lawful issue, testator bequeathed the whole surplus of the personalty to W. & D., share & share alike. By the same will, he devised to D. an annuity of £200 for life, charged on his land, to be paid by the above-mentioned trustees; & he devised to the same trustees, one of whom was W., & the survivors & survivor, & the heirs of the survivor, all his lands, charged with the annuity, & with so much of his debts, legacies, & funeral expenses, as the residue of the personalty would not extend to, in trust to receive the rents, issues, etc., & apply them to the use of testator's wife, during her life & widowhood, & afterwards to apply the rents, etc., to the maintenance of I. until she should attain the age of twenty-five, & afterwards in trust for I. & her heirs; but, in case it should happen that I. died without leaving lawful issue, then testator devised the lands to W. & D. in fee, as tenants in common. The will also empowered the trustees, in order to pay debts, etc., in case the residue of the personalty should be insufficient, to sell any part of the lands, & to grant, alien, & convey the same lands, or any part thereof, in fee simple. Testator's wife died in his lifetime; I. survived testator, & attained the age of twenty-one, but died under twenty-five, leaving no issue. The personalty not being sufficient to pay the debts, the trustees sold part of the land:—Held: on testator's death, I. took a vested equitable estate tail, & W. & D. took equitable remainders.

The words "if he die without issue," in legal construction mean an indefinite failure of issue; & the same words also without more words, even in personal estates, impart an indefinite failure of issue (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—DOE d. 9022. ——.]—Gift of residue of real & personal estate to A. for life & after her decease in trust for all her sons & daughters who should attain twenty-two equally, with a power to apply annual income or fund for their maintenance or benefit during their minority.

I cannot read this as a vested gift (ROMILLY, M.R.).—THOMAS v. WILBERFORCE (1862), 31 Beav. 299; 54 E. R. 1153.

9023. Testator, in 1853, devised freeholds to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents, after satisfying certain premiums & repairs, to & for the use of his grandson, C., for life, & after his decease "to & for the use of all & every the child or children of C., equally as tenants in common, who should attain the age of twenty-one years being sons, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry," & if but one such child, to him or her absolutely. Testator devised & bequeathed the residue of his estates to his trustees, upon trust to convert, invest, & hold the same, & the accumulations thereof, upon similar trusts for his grandchildren & their issue. He then directed his trustees to apply a competent part of the income of the investments for the maintenance & education of such "grandchildren & their issue"; & to accumulate the residue, as in his will was mentioned. C. attained twenty-one, & died in 1869 leaving three children, still infants:—Held: they were entitled to maintenance out of the interim rents & profits of the specifically devised freeholds.

The infants are presumptively entitled to the rents & profits of this property (STUART, V.-C.).—BEST v. DONMALL (1871), 40 L. J. Ch. 160; 24 L. T. 217; 19 W. R. 400.

9024. ——.]—Testator devised lands to trustees, their heirs & assigns, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of such child or children of A. as should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee, with remainders over; & empowered the trustees to apply the income to which any infant devisee should be presumptively entitled towards his maintenance or for his benefit during his minority. A. died leaving four children, three adult & one an infant:—Held: the contingent remainder of the infant child of A. was equitable, & did not fail by reason of the death of A. before the remainder vested.—BERRY v. BERRY (1878), 7 Ch. 9025. ——.]—Testator, by will executed before the passing of Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (c. 33), devised freehold property to the use of E. for life, & after her death to the use of trustees, their heirs & assigns, during the life of S., upon trust for S., & after her death to the child or children of S., who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. Testator then directed that after the death of the survivor of E. & S. his trustees might, during the minority of any child of S. for the time being presumptively entitled, receive the rents of the premises or the share thereof to which any such minor should be actually or presumptively entitled, & apply same for his or her maintenance, & directed that the unapplied income should follow the destination of the share from which the same should arise. On the death of the survivor of E. & S. there were five children, three of whom were infants & unmarried:—Held: the children took the legal estate; but, looking to the maintenance clause, there was a sufficient intention expressed on the whole will that infants should share, & the gift must be construed as an executory devise, & not as a contingent remainder.—Re BOURNE, RYMER v. HARPLEY (1887), 56 L. 9026. Whether gifts vested or contingent.]—A. by his will, ordered all his personal estate to be sold, for the payment of his debts & legacies; & in case it should prove insufficient, he devised his real estate to his exors., for the purpose of making good the deficiency. He then devised his real estate, after such time as his debts & legacies should be paid by the rents & profits thereof, to E. for life; & in case E. should have any issue male, then to such issue male & his heirs for ever; & after the decease of E. in case he left no issue male, then after such time as testator's debts & legacies were fully paid, he devised part of his real estate to J. S. in fee, & the residue to J. N. in fee. E. entered into possession, & kept down the interest of the debts; but afterwards suffered a common recovery of the whole estate, & declared the uses thereof to himself in fee:—Held: an estate for life was vested in E. at the time of the recovery, notwithstanding the debts were not paid, & that he could make a good tenant to the præcipe; also, the remainders limited to J. 9035. ——.]—Testator named Henry Thorpe devised his real estate to trustees to permit his son Henry to receive the rents thereof during his life; & after his decease, testator devised the property to the heirs of the body of his son Henry, & for want of such issue to testator's nephew Henry for life, & after his death to testator's "right heirs of the name of Henry Thorpe, if any such there should then be, for ever":—Held: the ultimate limitation was a contingent remainder which would vest in the person who at the time of the nephew's death filled the character of a right heir of testator & had the name of Henry Thorpe ; but, there being at that time no person who answered both descriptions, the property vested in testator's heir-at-law.—THORPE v. THORPE (1862), 1 H. & C. 326 ; 32 L. J. Ex. 79 ; 8 Jur. N. S. 871 ; 10 W. R. 778.

9058. Gift on forfeiture by prior devisee.]—Testator devised a freehold estate to his son for life, & after his death among all the children of the son born or to be born who should live to attain twenty-one, in equal shares as tenants in common in fee. By a subsequent clause he directed that if the son should attempt to dispose of his life interest or should become bkpt. or insolvent, or the estate devised to him "should be taken in execution by any process of law for the benefit of any creditor or creditors," then the gift to him should become void & cease as if he were dead, & the estate devised to him should "thenceforth absolutely vest in & belong to the person or persons who under the devises & limitations hereinbefore contained would be next entitled thereto." A judgment for debt having been recovered against the son who was in possession, the judgment creditor obtained the appointment of a receiver of the rents. At this time the son had two children, one of age & one under age, & he afterwards had other children:—Held: as the limitations to the children of the son on the determination of the life estate by forfeiture did not take effect on the natural determination of the prior estate, they were not contingent remainders but executory devises, & took effect in favour of all such children of the son whenever born as attained twenty-one.—BLACKMAN v. FYSH, [1892] 3 Ch. 209; 67 L. The vesting of a residuary bequest is especially favoured, to prevent an intestacy; & a direction, that the interest should accumulate & be paid with the capital, after a deduction for maintenance & preferment, is not sufficient to prevent it.—BOLGER v. MACKELL (1800), 5 Ves. 509; 31 E. S., the sums to be free of duty & to be paid respectively as to £50, part thereof, on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, & as to £50, part thereof, on their attaining the age of twenty-five years, & she directed that the balance £100 for her grandson J. W. L. S. be paid him on his attaining the age of thirty years, & the balances £50 for J. V. S. & F. D. S. be paid them on their respectively attaining the age of thirty years. There was no disposition of the intermediate income, or gift over of the principal. J. W. L. S. survived testatrix, & on attaining twenty-one the first-mentioned sum of £50 was paid to him, but he died before attaining twenty-five:—Held: each bequest was equivalent to a gift of a legacy to the particular legatee, payable as to part at twenty-one, further part at twenty-five, & the balance at thirty; & each legatee upon attaining twenty-one was entitled to the payment of his legacy & the intermediate interest or income, & the legal personal representative of any legatee who survived testatrix & died before actual payment was entitled to the legacy or balance unpaid of both principal & income.

A legacy to A. upon attaining a given age is contingent upon the attainment of that age by the legatee, but a legacy to A. payable at a given age is a present gift & vests at once, the payment only being postponed; so that if the legatee dies before the age prescribed for payment his legal personal representative will be entitled (JOYCE, J.)—Re COUTURIER, COUTURIER v. SHEA, [1907] 1 Ch. 470; 76 L. The gift is to her for life, & afterwards to sell, & pay & divide the produce amongst all her children, to be paid as & when they respectively attain twenty-one. There is therefore a clear distinction between the gift & the time of payment. It is to be divided amongst them all, but it is to be paid to them "as & when" such children attain twenty-one. The postponement of the payment does not postpone the vesting. 9132. —— Payment conditional on donee being of competent understanding.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon the usual trusts for conversion & investment, & directed them to pay such sums for the maintenance & education of his sons M. & N., during their minorities, or for apprenticing them, as his trustees should think proper; & declared that, when his sons should have attained their ages of twenty-one years, his trustees should pay the then residue of the moneys unto his two sons, provided that they should be, in the opinion of his trustees, of competent understanding & sufficient discretion to manage & take due care thereof. M. & N. were both lunatic at the time of their attaining their majority :—Held: the qualification as to the sons being of competent understanding did not make the gift to them conditional, & testator's estate vested in them absolutely.—WRIGHT v. WRIGHT (1852), 21 L. 9133. Provision for settlement to separate use in case of marriage.]—Testator bequeathed one-third of his residue to his daughter, her exors., etc., to be vested at twenty-one, but not to be payable until twenty-five. He declared it should not be subject to the control of any husband, but should devolve & be settled by deed upon her, as a feme sole, & that the income should not be anticipated, & that until her marriage, she should only be entitled to receive the dividends, & retain the power to bequeath the capital by will. The daughter, being unmarried :—Held: she took absolutely, & was entitled to payment of the fund out of ct. on attaining twenty-one.—Re YOUNG'S SETTLEMENT (1853), 18 Beav. 199; 52 E. R. 79.

9134. —— Gift & direction for payment in separate clauses—Construed as one clause.]—Testatrix gave a share of residue upon trust for her son for life, & after his death "upon trust to transfer & pay the capital of the trust funds unto & amongst the children, if only one, or both or all the children, if more than one, of her son" in manner thereinafter mentioned. Then followed a direction making the gift to the son void if he aliened or incumbered it, & giving over the dividends to the parties entitled in remainder; then followed another direction of some length, & then a declaration that the shares should be payable at twenty-one or marriage :—Held: the context of the will not repelling but rather supporting that construction, this was not a substantive gift, with a simple direction to pay, but one general direction to pay at twenty-one or marriage, & the interests of the son's children were not vested.—SHUM v.

Testator made several codicils to his will, bequeathing other legacies to different individuals, & by the last of them he directed that, "as far as was practicable all legacies should be paid within six months after his decease" :—Held : such direction had reference only to the state of testator's assets, & was not meant to alter the time of payment of the £1,000 legacies.—FROST v. CAPEL (1839), 2 Beav. 184 ; 9 L. J. Ch. 84 ; 48 E. R. 1150.

9166. ——.]—Testatrix bequeathed several legacies, &, amongst others, one to a servant, "if he should be residing with her at the time of her decease, but not otherwise" ; & she directed the legacies to be paid "within six months after her decease," & declared that the legacies should not be vested until payable. The legatee died before the expiration of six months :—Held : the representatives of the legatee were entitled to the legacy.—LUCAS v. CARLINE (1840), 2 Beav. 367 ; 48 E. R. 1223.

9167. ——.]—Testator directed the rents of his estates to be accumulated for five years, "at the end of which time I leave as follows : to H. G. £200 ; & to W. B., W. C., E. M., or as many as are living, £100 each : & to M. N., S. H., S. S., or as many as are then living, £50 each : & the same sum to be given at the expiration of ten years from the time of my death, & ditto at the end of fifteen & twenty years from my death." Two of the legatees died between the end of the tenth & the fifteenth year after testator's death, having received the payments which became due to them at the end of the fifth & tenth years :—Held : the rights of the legatees named in the will to receive the payments were contingent on their surviving the times of payment, &, the exors. of the then deceased legatees could not claim any payment at the end of the fifteenth year.—BRUCE v. CHARLTON (1842), 13 Sim. 65 ; 6 Jur. 594 ; 60 E. The circumstance of introducing a legatory subject by the word "after" cannot be construed so to affect the gift as to make it a condition. The solid substantial distinction is, whether testator meant it as a condition. This cannot be construed as making a new rule of law. The rule, which I take to be that of the civil law, not being broke in upon, but allowed & construed as it was by LORD TALBOT, LORD HARDWICKE, & LORD THURLOW. 9204. ——.]—Testator bequeathed his residue to his wife for life, & at her decease " to be equally divided between his two daughters, B. & C.," & in case of marriage to be settled on themselves. The tenant for life was still living, & B. had never been married :—Held : B. took an absolute vested interest on the death of testator.—SMITH v. COLMAN (1857), 25 Beav. 216 ; 53 E. R. 619.

9205. ——.] - (1) The use of such words as " pay & transfer " as the only words of gift in a deferred bequest does not make such bequest contingent : the true criterion is, what was the reason for the postponement ? If it was the position of the fund, as in a gift to one for life, & after his death to others, the bequest in remainder vests at once ; but if it was the position of the legatee, as where the gift is by a direction to pay the fund to the legatee when he shall attain twenty-one, it is contingent.

A bequest of personalty to trustees upon trust to pay the interest thereof to the testator's daughters A. & B. for their lives & the life of the survivor, & upon the decease of the survivor to pay & transfer the capital equally among all testator's children, & the issue, if any, of A. & B., & of any other deceased child, in such manner that such issue might be entitled to such share or shares as his or their deceased parent or parents respectively, if living, A. & B. excepted, would have been entitled to. A. & B. died without leaving issue :—Held : the bequest in remainder vested at testator's death ; the whole fund belonged to testator's children other than A. & B., & to the children living at the death of such as had died leaving children ; the shares of such as had died without leaving children belonged to their representatives.

(2) It has constantly been held, that it is contrary to all sound rules of construction to infer, that it was the intention of testator to give to the parent stock & the issue together a common interest in a fund ; & I think that the words here, directing that the issue should take their parents' shares notwithstanding that C. & H are excepted, shows that it was the prevailing intention of testator to substitute children in the room of their deceased parents, but not that parents & their

But in case of the death of either previous to the time aforesaid leaving issue, then to such issue, with other remainders over. By a codicil, testator directed the investments & payments to his wife to be continued during her life, though she might live beyond the daughter's attainment of the age of twenty-one; &, reciting that his son was dead, he gave the share & interest, which he would have taken, to the daughter, to be paid & applied along with her own. The daughter survived testator & attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the wife, leaving a child:—Held: the daughter took an absolute vested interest in the fund on attaining twenty-one which her death in the lifetime of the wife did not divest in favour of the child & the other persons entitled over.

should attain twenty-five, but not before, &, if more than one, in equal shares, & in case there should not be "any such child" the fund was to form part of his residue. Testator declared that, until the £12,000 should be invested, his trustees should pay to his daughter or, in the event of her death, to her husband & children, interest on their respective portions. Testator also declared that his trustees might at their discretion raise any part or parts, not exceeding together one moiety, of the expectant share of any grandchild under his will, & apply same for his or her advancement, etc. & testator empowered his trustees to apply all or any part of the income arising from the expectant share of any grandchild under his will, after the death of the preceding owner for life thereof, for the maintenance & education of each such grandchild, & he directed his trustees to invest & accumulate the unapplied income in augmentation of the capital of such share. By a codicil testator directed his trustees to hold a moiety of the residue of his estate, real & personal, in trust to pay the income thereof to a son during his life; & after his death for his child or children absolutely upon their attaining twenty-five; & in the event of the death of either or all the son's children before attaining twenty-five, then upon trust to pay the share of the child or children so dying to another son absolutely:—Held: under the gift of the £12,000 & also under the gift of a moiety of the residue, the grandchildren took immediate vested interests, subject to their being divested in case they did not attain twenty-five, & the trusts were not void for remoteness.

9268. ——.]—Testator, who died in 1876, by his will, dated in 1871, devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to his trustees upon trusts to sell & convert & to hold the income of the proceeds upon trust for his son & daughters for life in equal shares, & after their respective deceases "upon trust to pay or transfer the share from which such income arose of each such son & daughter unto & equally among his or her children who shall then have attained or shall thereafter attain the age of twenty-one years, or in case there should be but one such child then living upon trust to pay or transfer same to such only child on his or her attaining that age. Testator left one son & six daughters surviving him. Amongst the daughters was Mrs. L. T., who died in 1925, having had six children, one of whom died in infancy; five lived to attain the age of twenty-one years, but one, A. E. T., after attaining the age of twenty-one years, died in 1915, in his mother's lifetime:—Held: there was no necessity for reflecting back the contingency in the latter part of the gift of the child surviving the mother into the earlier part of the gift, & therefore all the children of Mrs. L. T., who attained the age of twenty-one years, became entitled to an absolute vested interest in the capital of Mrs. L. T.'s settled share original as well as accruing in testator's residuary estate irrespective of whether or not they survived her.—Re STEPHENS, TOMALIN v. TOMALIN'S TRUSTEE, [1927] 1 Ch. 1; 95 L. 9289. ——.]—Testator gave his residuary estate to his wife for life, & then to be divided into three shares, & he gave one-third between the children of his brother T., living at the death of his wife, one-third to his niece F., & the remaining one-third to his nephew & niece, T. & S.; & in case such, any, or either of them should die, having left a child or children surviving them, he declared that the expectant's share should go between his or her children. T.'s children all died in the lifetime of the widow, but some left children:—Held: the latter were entitled to the first-mentioned one-third.—GAREY v. WHITTINGHAM (1842), 5 Beav. 268; 11 L. J. Ch. 334; 6 Jur. 545; 49 E. R. 580.

9290. ——.]—A. bequeathed to trustees certain leasehold property, in trust, to pay the rents to B. for life, & after B.'s death A. gave the leaseholds to the heirs & children of the body of B., lawfully begotten, whether males or females, equally between them, for all the residue of the term of years that should remain unexpired thereon at B.'s death. B. had ten children, some of whom died during her lifetime, & others survived her :—Held : the respective personal representatives of the children who predeceased B. took equal shares in the leaseholds with the children who survived her.—SWAN v. BOWDEN (1842), 11 L. J. Ch. 155.

9291. ——.]—Testator gave specific legacies to three of his nieces, daughters of his sister, by name, & the residue to his sister & her husband for their lives, subject to an annuity to A., & after the death of the parents & A., he directed the residue to be "divided equally between the daughters of his sister," & which he bequeathed "to his nieces." There was a gift over, if no daughter of his sister should be then living. The sister had four daughters born at the date of the will, & another born after the testator's death. Some only survived the tenants for life.—Held : the residue was divisible among all the nieces, & they took vested interests, subject to be divested in an event which had not happened.—LOCKER v. BRADLEY (1842), 5 Beav. 593 ; 6 Jur. 1098 ; 49 E. R. 708.

9292. ——.]—Testatrix bequeathed the residue of her funded property in trust for her niece for life, &, after her death, to be equally divided amongst all her children, whether sons or daughters, share & share alike : in case it should happen that there was but one child at the niece's death, then to go to that one only child ; & in case of failure of issue, to go as the niece should appoint by her will. The niece had eleven children, three of whom died in her lifetime :—Held : all the children took vested interests, &, as more than one survived their mother, there was no divesting of interests.

The rule is not to import, into an instrument, more of contingency than is expressed in it ; & as the event which testatrix contemplated, namely, that there might be only one child living at the death of her niece, has not happened, I am of opinion that the vested interests which the children took, were not divested by their dying in the lifetime of their mother (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—TEMPLEMAN v. WARRINGTON (1842), 13 Sim. 267 ; 60 E. or on marriage; & if any of them should die under age, or, as to the daughters, unmarried, then as to the original shares belonging to the children so dying & the shares to which they might become entitled under the now-stating trust in trust for the others of them, in equal shares, their exors., etc., & in case no child should live to attain a vested interest in the trust funds, then in trust for testator's next of kin. Testator then empowered the trustees, but during the life of his mother, with her consent, to apply the whole or any part of the principal trust moneys to which the children of his sisters should be entitled under the trusts thereinbefore contained for their advancement, notwithstanding they should be under age, or, as to daughters, unmarried; & he directed that in case, at the death of his mother, any child who, under the trusts thereinbefore contained, might be entitled to any vested or presumptive share or shares of the trust moneys, should, if a son, be under age, or if a daughter, under age & unmarried, the trustees should pay the interest of their shares to his sisters for the maintenance of their children.

Testator's mother died a few months after him. His sisters had several children, some of whom were born after the death of his mother:—Held: the mother's death was the period at which the shares vested, subject, however, to be divested, &, consequently, the afterborn children were not entitled to participate in the funds.

It is necessary, however, to consider what testator there meant by the word "vested," whether he used it in its strict technical sense, or whether he did not mean "indefeasible" (per CUR.).

There are many cases which show that where gifts to children are not to take effect until a future period, all the children who come into esse before that period arrives, are to be let in (per CUR.).—BERKELEY v. SWINBURNE (1848), 16 Sim. 275; 17 L. J. Ch. 416; 12 Jur. 571; 60 E. R. 880.

The three sons & the daughter died before the tenant for life. He died on Apr. 6, 1863. Each of the sons left children. The daughter died without issue:—Held: the legacy vested in fourths; the children of the three sons took one-third each as joint tenants, & the personal representatives of the daughter took the other fourth.—Re BLACKWELL'S TRUSTS (1864), 11 L. 9315. ——.]—Testator having devised the whole of his real & personal estate to trustees, whom he appointed his exors., concluded his will as follows: "As to, for & concerning the residue of my estate & property, both real & personal, in trust to pay unto my nephews & nieces then living" (i.e. at the death of a tenant for life) "viz., R. R. B., W. R. B., A. B., E. H., E. W., E. B., the children of R. R. S. (lately deceased), the father's part or share, M. J., & W. R., by equal share & share alike." W. R. B. survived testator & died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held: the above was a gift not to individuals, but to a class, the members of which were not ascertained until the death of the tenant for life; hence, the share of W. R. B. was not undisposed of, but was divisible with the rest of the fund amongst the nephews & nieces who were living at the death of the tenant for life.—IRELAND v. TREMBATH (1865), 12 L. 9316. ——.]—I must, however, observe, with reference to this point, that there are cases where, although the gift to the issue, or children, is an original gift, testator has by his language precluded children from taking who did not survive their parent. Thus if the gift had been to such of the nephews & nieces as should be living at the happening of a certain event, & to the issue of such of the nephews & nieces as should have previously died leaving issue; those words would be a sufficient indication of testator's intention, that such children only as were left by their parent, that is, as survived their parent, should take (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—LANPHIER v. BUCK (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 484; 34 L. A. had issue one child, who died an infant, unmarried:—Held: the child of A. did not take a vested interest in the £4,000.—Re FLETCHER, DORÉ v. FLETCHER (1885), 53 L. T. 813; 34 W. R. 29.

The widow married again:—Held: thereupon her children took immediate vested interests.—Re TUCKER, BOWCHIER v. GORDON (1887), 56 L. J. Ch. 449; 56 L. T. 118; 35 W. R. 344.

9327. .]—Testator by his will dated in Feb. 1854, left the entire residue of his property, which was principally realty, to his trustees therein named, "In trust for the benefit of my dear wife during her lifetime, at her death to be equally divided among our children, Thomas, James & Mary Hamilton, to take what would have been their mother's share, & any other of my grandchildren to represent their parents in similar circumstances."

Testator died in Dec. 1856, leaving seven children. His widow died in Apr. 1889. Thomas, James & Mary Hamilton named in the will were grandchildren of testator, & their mother, testator's daughter, was dead at the date of the will. Three other children of testator died in the interval between the date of his death & the date of the death of his widow. The question was, what in the events which had happened was the true construction of the devise & bequest of the residue of the testator's real & personal estate:—Held: the words "in similar circumstances" afforded no ground for disturbing the well-settled rule that where the period of distribution was the death of the tenant for life, & the gift was one among a class of persons, then the share of any one dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life went over. Therefore, the children of testator who died after his death & before the death of his widow did not take vested or indefeasible interests in testator's estate; but the interests of such children so dying were devised & bequeathed to their children by the concluding clause in the will.—Re MILES, MILES v. MILES (1889), 61 L. T. 359.

9328. ——.]—Testator bequeathed to his three daughters, in equal shares, the life-rent of a sum of £36,000, to be invested within five years after his decease. Until the investment was made, he bequeathed to each daughter an annuity of £200. In the event of a daughter dying, without leaving issue, her life rent interest was to accresce to her surviving sister or sisters, whilst the capital of the share life-rented by her lapsed into residue. In the event of her leaving issue, the trustees were directed "to divide equally amongst the issue of each of my daughters" one-third of the sum directed to be invested. Mrs. M., one of the daughters, died in Mar. 1895, leaving surviving two daughters. Mrs. M. had had also a son & a daughter, Mrs. H., who predeceased her childless, but died after testator. The question was whether the representatives of the predeceasing issue were entitled to a share of the capital appointed to be divided amongst Mrs. M.'s issue:—Held: all the children of Mrs. M. were entitled to share equally in the division of the fund in which their mother had a life interest.

It is an elementary principle on the construction of wills that a gift to a class after a life interest or life rent includes all the persons within the description of the class who were alive at testator's death or have come into being during the lifetime of the life tenant. I think it is equally clear that when the gift is made to depend on the happening of a contingency that contingency is not imported by implication into the description of the class so as to confine the gift to those members of the class who survive the contingency (LORD DAVEY).

Although the bequest may be dependent on a contingency this will not necessarily prevent the vesting. The time at which the contingency happens in a bequest to a class does not determine the vesting in the individuals comprising the class. If the contingency should apply to the individual & relate to his capacity to take, as for example a bequest left subject to the condition that the legatee should attain the age of twenty-one years, there can be no vesting till he or she shall reach that age, but where the contingency applies to a class & not as a condition of the capacity of the legatee to take, the contingency is not to be imported into the constitution of the trust so as to suspend vesting till the death of the life-renter (LORD SHAND).—HICKLING v. FAIR, [1899] A. of the words " or legal representatives " did not operate as a divesting clause, but constituted an alternative gift to arise only in the event of there being no child that took a vested interest ; & consequently all children of the daughters who survived testator, or were born after his death, took vested interests notwithstanding that they might not have survived their respective mothers.

(2) The objects among whom such real or personal estate becomes ultimately distributable are the children who may be living at the period of distribution & the representatives of such as may have died before that period, having survived testator.—Re ROBERTS, PERCIVAL v. ROBERTS, [1903] 2 Ch. 200 ; 72 L. Clause 8 provided as follow: " if any child shall die in my lifetime or after my decease leaving a child or children who shall survive me then & in every such case such last-mentioned child or children shall take, & if more than one equally between them the share which his or her or their parent would have taken of & in the residuary trust funds if such parent had survived me " :—Held : the provided shares of the residuary estate vested in the children of testator from his death, but in the event of the death of any child before the death of testator's widow, which was the contemplated period of distribution, the vesting of that child's share was subject to defeasance in favour of his or her child or children.—WARD v. BROWN, [1916] 2 A. He then gave the remaining four-fifths separately to his four daughters, nominatim, for life, with remainder to their respective children ; & it was his will that if any of his children should die without issue that the share of her so dying should go to the children of such of his daughters as should leave issue ; but in case all his daughters should die without leaving lawful issue, then he devised all his said real & personal estate unto his brothers & sisters ; he subsequently devised the one-fifth given to the wife for life in a similar manner. A., one of the daughters, died without issue before the youngest attained twenty-one :—Held : the shares vested on the youngest attaining twenty-one ; the gift over was only of vested shares, & therefore there was an intestacy as to the one-fifth intended for A.—BASTIN v. WATTS (1840), 3 Beav. 97 ; 4 Jur. 791 ; 49 E. All testator's children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of S., testator's widow:—Held: the class of children entitled to the shares were those living when the youngest child for the time being attained the age of twenty-one years; the trust for sale was an absolute & not a contingent trust, & testator meant the time when the youngest child attained twenty-one as the time to pay the proceeds among all the children then living.—BUSHELL v. NIXON (1852), 19 L. principal sum should be paid to him, & he made a gift over in case of the death of the nephew under that age. The legatee was an infant at testator's death, & died an infant some years afterwards. The trustees raised the fund, & applied part of the income to his maintenance & education, & at his death they had in their hands an accumulation of income unapplied :—Held: the legacy was vested at testator's death, subject to be divested in the event which happened of the death of the legatee under the specified age, & the whole of the income belonged to him during his life, & his personal representative was entitled to the accumulations.

Where a legacy is given to be paid at a particular age, & the whole income is given in the meantime, that gives a present vested interest (MALINS, V.-C.).

There are two subjects of gift. There is, first of all, the gift of the legacy, payable at a particular time; & then there is the gift of the income for the benefit of the legatee in the meantime. Where this is the case the legacy is treated as being vested, & the payment only postponed (MALINS, V.-C.).—Re PEEK'S TRUSTS (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 221; 42 L. J. Ch. 422; 21 W. R. 820.

9367. —— ——.]—(1) A gift to a class or an individual on attaining a given age, which standing alone is contingent, is vested, if accompanied by a gift of the whole income, for the benefit of the class or individual during the interval.

Testatrix directed the trustees of her will, after the death of a tenant for life, to transfer a fund to the children of A. in equal shares, upon their respectively attaining twenty-one, the interest of the fund to be applied for their maintenance until they should respectively attain that age :—Held: the gift of the interest created a vested interest in the capital.

(2) I take it to be settled law that a gift of personal estate to a class or an individual at twenty-one, or on attaining twenty-one or when, or as, or if, they or he attain twenty-one, standing alone, is a contingent bequest; but if followed or preceded by a gift of the whole income for the absolute benefit of the legatee in the meantime, it is then a vested gift (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re HOLT'S ESTATE, BOLDING v. STRUGNELL (1876), 45 L. J. Ch. 208; 24 W. R. 339.

9368. —— ——.]—Testatrix gave her residuary real & personal estate to trustees in trust for sale & conversion & investment of the proceeds, & to hold the investments upon trust to pay the income thereof, "or such part thereof as her said trustees" should "from time to time deem expedient," in or towards the maintenance & education of her children until they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years; & from & immediately after their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, then upon trust to pay & transfer the capital to her said children in equal shares, & to settle each daughter's "share whether original or accruing"; & testatrix empowered her trustees to dispose of any competent part, not exceeding one-half, of "the presumptive share of any of her children," for their advancement in life. Testatrix left three children, of whom two attained twenty-one, & the third died an infant :—Held: the infant did not take a vested interest in his one-third share of the residuary estate of testatrix.

In my opinion when a legacy is payable at a certain age, but is, in terms, contingent, the legacy becomes vested when there is a direction to pay the interest in the meantime to the person to whom the legacy is given; & not the less so when there is superadded a direction that the trustees "shall pay the whole or such part of the interest as they shall think fit." But I am not aware of any case where, the gift being of an entire fund payable to a class of persons equally on their attaining a certain age, a direction to apply the income of the whole fund in the meantime for their maintenance has been held to create a vested interest in a member of the class who does not attain that age (JESSEL, M.R.).—Re PARKER, BARKER v. BARKER (1880), 16 Ch. 9372. —— Time appointed for payment.]—If the interest or dividends alone are the subject of the bequest until a particular time, & the principal is no sooner taken out of the residue, but is directed for the first time to be taken out of it, & paid or transferred to the legatee at the end of that period, the intermediate gift of the interest or dividends will not vest the capital. & this on the ground of the apparent intention to constitute the time appointed for the payment to be of the essence of the gift (ALDERSON, B.).—CROMEK v. LUMB (1839), 3 Y. & C. Ex. 565.

9373. —— Interval between gift of income & principal.]—Bequest to the exor. & a trustee of the proceeds of a policy upon testator's life in trust, so long as A. should not have committed any act of bkpcy., to pay him the interest until he should attain twenty-five, so that he might not deprive himself thereof by anticipation, in which events A. was to lose all benefit of the provision, "my object being for the personal wants of A. until any of such events should have happened, & then for the good of his family." On the happening of any such event, the fund was to be in trust for the children of A.; but if A. should not then have any children, then, subject to a discretionary power in the trustees to pay A. any sums they might think proper, the trust moneys were to fall into the residue. The money received upon the policy was to be paid to A. upon his attaining twenty-five; in case he died under twenty-five, leaving any child or children, the trust moneys & interest thereof were to be in trust for the children of A. The will also contained a power of advancement for the benefit of A. A. died under twenty-one, unmarried. He had never become bkpt., or attempted to anticipate :—Held: A. took a vested interest in the money secured by the policy, subject to be divested in the event of bkpcy. or alienation, or of death under twenty-five leaving children, & as neither of these events had occurred, the interest remained absolutely vested in him.

The theory being that, where the principal is given at a distant epoch, & the whole income is given in the meantime, the ct., leaning in favour of vesting, has said that the whole thing is given; but if there occurs an interval or gap, which separates the gift of the income from the principal, it is not vested (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—PEARSON v. DOLMAN (1866), L. S. by her will appointed two-fifths of the property to two trustees, of whom N. was the survivor, in trust to pay the income to her son till he should attain the age of forty years, & then in trust for her son, his exors. & administrators: provided that in case her son should assign his share in the property, then the appointment for his benefit should be void, & the two-fifths should be held in trust for the other objects of the power. The son died under the age of forty, without having assigned his share, leaving a will of which B. was exor. After the death of S., L. & N. were appointed trustees of the original settlement. N. afterwards, with the consent of the son's exor., obtained possession of the son's share. Subsequently N. misappropriated the fund. The persons beneficially interested under the son's will recovered judgment against B. for wilful default in allowing the property to remain in N.'s hands; & B. being dead his exor. brought an action against L. to make him liable for the loss of the fund:—Held: on the construction of the will of S., the beneficial interest in two-fifths of the property vested absolutely in her son & passed by his will.—SCOTNEY v. LOMER (1886), 31 Ch. It has been argued that the legacies of £1,000 are contingent. Supposing that to be so, it will not prove that there were no vested interests in the corpus of the estate. Looking at this will, it cannot, I think, be doubted that testator intended the residue to go to the persons whom he has named; & I think . . . we must consider the words, relied on by the next of kin as importing condition or contingency, to have been intended merely for the direction of the trustees, as meant to describe the event in which the enjoyment was to commence, & not as operating to prevent the vesting in interest (TURNER, L.J.).—ODDIE v. BROWN (1859), 4 De G. & J. 179; 28 L. It is well known that a legacy which would, upon the terms of the gift, be contingent upon the legatee attaining a certain age, may become vested by a gift of the interest in the meantime, whether direct or in the form of maintenance provided it be of the whole interest; which clearly marks the principle, that it is the gift of the whole interest which effects the vesting of the legacy. . . . B. & C. survived testator. Afterwards C. died in the lifetime of B. without having attained the age of twenty-one years:—Held: C. took a vested interest in the £1,000.—HAMMOND v. MAULE (1844), 1 Coll. 281; 13 L. J. 9426. —— ——.]—Testator devised estates to trustees upon trust to pay certain annuities to his wife & other persons, with a direction that during the life of his wife the surplus rents should be applied in discharge of incumbrances affecting the devised property; &, subject to these trusts, he declared that the trustees should stand seised of the property, in trust for various persons, not in esse at testator's death, successively in tail, with remainder to testator's niece for life, with a direction that during her minority the rents should be applied as after mentioned, & then followed a clause to the effect that, if any person beneficially entitled to the rents should be in his or her minority, an annual sum not exceeding £300 should be applied out of the rents to the maintenance of that person, & the residue of the rents should accumulate, & the accumulations be applied in the discharge of incumbrances:—Held: upon the construction of these inconsistent clauses, & other parts of the will, the testator's niece was not, at least, during the life of the testator's widow, entitled to any part of the rents for her maintenance during minority.—WILLIAMES v. EDWARDS (1845), 2 Coll. 176; 63 E. R. 688.

9427. —— ——.]—Testator by his will devised & bequeathed to his trustees & exors. all his real & personal estate, upon trust, out of the rents & profits, to pay two annuities, to his wife & another person, & then to provide for the maintenance of three children of A. & for their advancement in life, & "to deduct the amount of such advancement from their share of the personal estate, & when the youngest of the three before-mentioned children (naming them), attained the age of twenty-one years, to assign, transfer, & convey, in such manner as counsel in the law should advise, all the rest, residue, & remainder of the money in the funds, securities for money, & all other his personal estate, & the freehold estate, charged with payment of the annuities, unto the before-mentioned three children, their heirs, etc., & the survivors & survivor of them"; & after appointing the exors. the guardians, he proceeded: "& that they (the children) should not, nor should either of them, possess the right to sell, convey, alienate, or in any other way legally incumber, etc., until the youngest of them then living attained the age of twenty-three years":—Held: the children took vested interests at the time of the death of testator.

Where testator directed the whole interest of the share of a fund to be appropriated, the party in whose favour such share was given took a present vested interest; it was not necessary the words should express interest; but if testator said that the interim profits were to go, in the meantime, before the period indicated for distribution, it would equally create a present vested interest in the share. Testator, by giving the ultimate residue to the parties, to whom or in whose favour the interim interests would be applicable, clearly showed that he intended they should have a power of disposition of their respective shares, before the youngest might attain his age of twenty-one; it was most improbable testator should intend that a child who attained twenty-one should be denuded of this right, or that it should be suspended until the youngest attained twenty-one. The word "survivor" imported joint-tenancy (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—MILNE v. LOE, ADDINSELL v. LOE (1848), 12 L. T. O. S. 240.

9428. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed a sum of money to his trustees, who were to pay the dividends to his brother, until his niece should attain the age of twenty-one, or should previously marry with the consent of her father, such interest to be applied by his brother in the maintenance & education of the niece, & when she should attain twenty-one, or marry with such consent, upon trust, to transfer the capital to her. The niece married under age, without consent:—Held: the dividends between the time of her marriage & her attaining twenty-one were to be paid to the niece.—Re CAMAC (1848), 17 L. J. 9429. —— ——.]—Gift by will of personalty to trustees, the proceeds to be invested & the interest & dividends paid to A. & B. respectively for their lives, & after their decease "to go to their respective children for their support & maintenance until they shall attain the age of twenty-two years severally, they to receive the principal & interest as they attain such age, in equal shares"; the share of any dying before such age to be divided amongst the survivors:—Held: the children had a vested interest in the capital of their respective shares under the will, receivable when they attained the age of twenty-two years.—HOBBS v. PARSONS (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 212; 23 L. T. O. S. 47; 2 W. R. 347; 65 E. R. 369.

After my decease I wish the interest of the above sum to be applied to their maintenance during their joint lives; & at the decease of her mother, if the child survives & lives till she has attained the age of twenty-one years, then the principal sum I bequeath to her; but in the event of both their deaths before the child shall have obtained the age of twenty-one years, then the principal sum to be paid to my brothers & sisters." The daughter lived to attain twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of her mother:—Held: the mother was entitled to the interest of the £2,000 during her life, & the daughter upon attaining the age of twenty-one acquired an absolute vested interest in the principal sum.—MOOR v. ABBOTT (1857), 26 L. He also directed other legacies to be paid out of the proceeds of the real estate, & gave the residue of the proceeds to other persons. The legatee of the £500 survived the tenant for life, but died under twenty-five:—Held: the legacy vested & passed to her personal representatives.—Re HART'S TRUSTS, Ex p. BLOCK (1858), 3 De G. & J. 195; 28 L. Or in case A. should, "at her decease, have two or more children," then to raise an annuity for their maintenance "until they should respectively attain twenty-five, & when they respectively attained that age, to pay each an equal share of the £10,000." Plff. was en ventre sa mère at testator's death, & was the only child of A. who survived her:—Held: the bequest of the £10,000 was too remote.—MERLIN v. BLAGRAVE (1858), 25 Beav. 125; 53 E. R. 584.

9433. —— ——.]—(1) Where there is a gift to A. at twenty-one with maintenance in the meantime, in order to make the legacy vested, there must be a trust so to apply the whole income.

Testator devised real estates to trustees upon trust to permit A. to receive the rents for life, & after her decease to apply such rents for the maintenance of C. until he should attain twenty-one, & if he should attain twenty-one in the lifetime of A., after her decease to C. in fee. But in case C. should die under twenty-one, then upon trust after the decease of the survivor of A. & C. to H. in fee. There was then a gift of the personalty to the trustees, on trust to pay an annuity of £5 to A., & to apply the residue for C.'s maintenance, & when he should attain twenty-one, to transfer the capital to him, subject to the annuity, but in case he should die under twenty-one in the lifetime of A., then to pay her an annuity of £10 for life, with a gift of the residue to H. On the question whether the legacy to C. was vested or contingent:—Held: it was vested.

One of the grandchildren having died in the lifetime of M., leaving issue, of whom several died under twenty-one:—Held: the interests of such of the issue of the grandchild as died under twenty-one did not vest at the death of their parent, but the share vested in such of the issue only as attained twenty-one.—Re ASHMORE'S TRUSTS (1869), L. Testatrix disposed of one of such shares in the following manner. As to one other equal ninth part or share of such dividends, rents, & interest, upon trust to pay or apply the same for & towards the maintenance & education of A., B., & C.; & as & when they should respectively attain the ages of twenty-one years, upon trust to pay them in equal shares one equal ninth part or share of such principal moneys, & the dividends & interest which might accrue due thereon. A. died in the lifetime of testatrix. B. survived testatrix but died under the age of twenty-one. C. survived testatrix & attained the age of twenty-one. Testator gave his residuary estate in trust to pay & transfer the same unto & equally between his two children, a son & daughter, on their severally attaining twenty-one, the income "during their respective minorities" to be applied in or towards their maintenance, with a power for the trustees at any time during the "respective minorities" of his said two children to advance any portion "of his or her presumptive share" in or towards "their" advancement in the world. Upon the construction of the will:—Held: the income of each share alone was to be applied separately for the maintenance of the child entitled to that share alone, & not indiscriminately in respect of both shares, & therefore, according to the rule above stated, each child took an immediate vested interest in his or her share.—Re GOSSLING, GOSSLING v. ELCOCK, [1903] 1 Ch. 448; 88 L. R. died during the continuance of the interest of the tenant for life. On the share subsequently falling into possession, the legal personal representative of R. claimed it as part of R.'s estate. The trustees had not attempted to deal with the share while reversionary:—Held: the effect of the gift was to empower the trustees to apply so much of the share as might be required for the personal benefit of R.; the trustees had not waived that discretion or been guilty of default, or refused to exercise it; but no trust was to be implied in R.'s favour as to the whole of the share. Therefore, under the circumstances, the share did not pass to the legal personal representative of R., no transmissible interest in the fund having ever vested in him.—Re STANGER, MOORSOM v. TATE (1891), 60 L. J. Effect of Gift Over.

(a) In General.

9506. General rule.]—A devise over, upon a contingency, does not, of itself, prevent the shares from vesting in the meantime, provided the words of bequest be in other respects sufficient to pass a present interest, although such a devise over of the entirety may be called in aid of other circumstances to show that no present interest was intended to pass.

Testator gives his personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to his daughter E. for her life, &, after her decease, to pay & divide the principal among the children of his said daughter, & the issue of a deceased child, as she should appoint, & in default of appointment to go to, & be equally divided among them ; & if but one, then to such only child ; the portions of sons to be paid at their respective ages of twenty-one, & of daughters at their respective ages of twenty-one, or marriage. If no issue, or all die before their respective portions become payable, then over. The shares are so given as to vest immediately in the children of E. though liable to be divested by all dying under twenty-one, without issue. The share of a child so dying was therefore held to pass to its representative.—SKEY v. BARNES (1816), 3 Mer. 335 ; 36 E. R. 128.

A. for life, & after her death the principal & capital thereof to go & be divided amongst her children. "& in case she should have no child or children," then the same to go to & for the benefit of his son M. & his children in like manner. He made a similar bequest in favour of his son M., & directed that "in case both his son & daughter should die without leaving any issue him or her surviving," then the sum of £1,500 should go and be divided amongst his next of kin & the remaining £1,500 amongst the next of kin of his wife. A. married pltf., by whom she had one child only, who died in her lifetime. A. died, leaving pltf. & deft. M. surviving her :—Held : the child of A. took a vested interest in the legacy of £1,500, which was not cut down by the subsequent bequest over, & pltf. was entitled to the capital as the legal personal representative of his daughter.—WHYTE v. COLLINS (1860), 3 L. 9588. ——.]—A bequest upon trust to pay & divide a share among the members of a class as & when they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-five years, may, although primâ facie of a contingent nature, be controlled by provisions in testator's will indicative of an intention to confer vested interests.

Thus, where such a bequest to the children of a tenant for life was followed by a gift over of the share, if the tenant for life should die without having issue, a provision that any beneficiary being entitled to a vested interest in any capital moneys under the will should until attaining twenty-five years be only entitled to the net income to arise from his "expectant share or interest," & a power of maintenance out of net income:—Held: each of the children took a vested interest before attaining twenty-five years of age, the expression "expectant share or interest" being construed as having reference to the vested share of a child being liable to be divested upon death under twenty-five years of age.—Re CAMPBELL, COOPER v. CAMPBELL (1919), 88 L. J. Ch. 239; 120 L. T. 562; 63 Sol. Jo. 286.

9589. Gift distinguished from gift to members of class.]—It was argued in argument, & indeed is well settled, that if there be a gift to an individual or a class upon the attainment of a certain age, such gift is primâ facie contingent on the specified age being attained, but that where there is also a gift to the same individual or class of the income to accrue before the specified age be attained, the gift of the corpus, though in form contingent, will be construed as conferring a vested interest. This is not unreasonable, for the donor evidently contemplates that the beneficiary will take the income till the specified age be attained & the corpus when such age is attained; in other words, that he will ultimately take the whole subject-matter of the gift, both principal & income. Further, the gift of the intermediate income may consist in a direction to apply such income for the maintenance or benefit of the individual or the members of the class, provided in the latter case that each beneficiary is to have the income of his or her expectant share & that testator does not create a common fund for the common maintenance of the class. It is possible also that a direction to apply the intermediate income or such part thereof as the trustees may think proper for the maintenance or benefit of the beneficiary will have the same effect. I cannot, however, find any case in which the creation in the trustees of a mere discretionary power to apply the income of an expectant share for the maintenance or benefit of the beneficiary, with a direction to accumulate the income not so applied for the benefit of the persons who ultimately attain a vested interest in the share in question, has been held to vest a gift originally given upon attaining a specified age. I do not see how it can in principle have this effect, for the donor is evidently contemplating not that the beneficiary will in some form or other enjoy the intermediate income, but that he will not so enjoy it unless the discretionary power be exercised. Further, I have come to the conclusion that there is a broad distinction, for the purposes I am considering, between a gift to a class upon attaining a specified age & a gift to such members of a class as attain a specified age. In the latter case clearly no one is intended to take unless he attains the age in question. It is no longer a question of construing as vested a gift which is only primâ facie contingent, but of adding to the class of beneficiaries (PARKER, J.).—Re HUME, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. MABEY, [1912] 1 Ch. 693; 81 L. L. Other Cases.

9590. Whether bequest vested or contingent—Bequest to A. during life of B.—Death of A. living B.]—Testator directed the proceeds of the residue of his estate to be divided between his three children in certain shares during their lives; & after the decease of any one or two of his said children, until the decease of the survivor, the shares that belonged to the parents in their lifetime were to be divided amongst the children of such one or two of his said children so dying; & after the decease of the survivor of the three children, the whole residue was to be divided between his grandchildren who should be then living equally per capita, & not per stirpes; & if any of his children should be then dead leaving issue, such issue were to stand in the place of their deceased parent, & receive the same proportion of the estate as such parent would have been entitled to if living. One of the daughters, who died first, had three children, who died in her lifetime. The trustees accumulated the shares of such daughter until the death of the survivor:—Held: the representative of the three deceased grandchildren was entitled to such accumulations.

It is clear that if the interest of a sum of money were given to C. D. during the life of J. S. & C. D. were to die, living J. S., the representatives of C. D. would be entitled (LORD CRANWORTH, V.-C.).—HOMER v. GOULD (1851), 1 Sim. N. S. 541; 15 Jur. 457; 61 E. R. 209; sub nom. HORNER v. GOULD, 20 L. J. Ch. 657.

9592. —— Bequest to children on death of either parent—Subsequent provision for distribution on death of parents.]—Testator gave the interest arising from a sum of stock to V., which interest he was to enjoy along with his wife, M., during their respective lives, but in the event of either dying & the survivor marrying again, then the capital to be divided, share & share alike, between their children; an arrangement ultimately to take place at the death of their parents, should neither marry again. Testator then directed that the money should not be removed from the English funds during the lifetime of V. & M., nor until the period arrived "for its distribution, after their death, among their children surviving, share & share alike":—Held: the interests of the children were not contingent on their surviving their parents, the concluding words not being sufficient to render the previously vested gift contingent.—Re DUKE, HANNAH v. DUKE (1880), 16 Ch. H., one of the daughters, died in the lifetime of testator's widow, unmarried: & upon the question whether the legacy of £200 given to her was vested or not:—Held: it was vested.—WILKINSON v. CHAMBERLAIN (1855), 3 W. 9653. —— Gift of interim interest.]—The English law, as administered by the Ct. of Ch. considers a gift to a legatee at twenty-one, or payable at twenty-one, or when he attains twenty-one, as a condition, & though interest is directed to be paid in the meantime, if the legatee dies before twenty-one the condition is not performed, & the legacy fails.

Testator gave a legacy upon the death of his granddaughter to her child or children, to be paid to such child or children at his, her or their respective ages of twenty-one years, & directed that the shares of such child or children as at the time of his granddaughter's death should be under the age of twenty-one years should bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. & charged the legacy on his residuary real & personal estate, & the personal estate was deficient.

The granddaughter died, leaving one child, who afterwards died under twenty-one:—Held: the legacy sank into, & was not raisable out of, testator's real estate.—PARKER v. HODGSON (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 568; 30 L. J. Ch. 590; 4 L. T. 762; 7 Jur. N. S. 750; 9 W. R. 607; 62 E. R. 495.

By a subsequent codicil, testator provided that if one of the three daughters should get married, the two then remaining single should, at the end of twelve months after his decease, pay to the married sister, the sum of £500 in lieu of any further claim on his property, & that the two surviving daughters, then single, should be sole possessors of all his property in fee :—Held : this codicil did not operate, unless one of the daughters were married before the death of testator, or at all events within twelve months after it.

It is contended, that his estate was subject to a condition, & that the estate in fee over vested in her was divested on her subsequent marriage. Now, it would require very clear words to effectuate such a purpose (JERVIS, C. J.).—LLOYD v. DAVIES (1854), 15 C. B. 76 ; 2 C. L. R. 1788 ; 23 L. T. O. S. 160 ; 18 Jur. 1056 ; 2 W. R. 495 ; 139 E. 9657. ——.]—A vested interest, previously given, is incapable of being destroyed, except upon the clearest terms to that effect contained in the limitation over. Here the limitation over in favour of defts. is so imperfectly expressed, that it is impossible to say whether the mistake, if there be any mistake, is in the terms of the limitation over ; or whether, if testator's attention had been called to the circumstance, he would not have said, that the mistake existed in the antecedent gift ; &, therefore, it is proper to hold that the person who takes under the antecedent gift is not to be deprived of his estate except upon the happening of the exact event upon which he was to be deprived of it, according to the strict interpretation of the limitation over (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—MADDISON v. CHAPMAN (1858), 4 K. & J. 709 ; 70 E. 9672. Coming into possession."]—R. D. by his will, made in 1810, gave all the residue of his estate & effects to trustees, in trust for his son, D. W. D., for life, with remainder to his issue in strict settlement; provided that in case D. W. D. should at any time thereafter come into possession of an estate entailed upon him, testator, & his issue by his late uncle R. D., then the provision by his will made for D. W. D. & his issue, & the trusts thereof, should be void, & the property be divided among the younger children of testator. By the marriage settlement of R. D., the uncle of testator, three estates, A., B., & C. were settled on R. D. the settlor, for life; with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male, with remainder to the right heirs of R. D. the settlor. R. D., the settlor, by his will, dated in 1769, confirmed his marriage settlement, &, in case he should have no children, etc., he gave all his estates, real & personal, to his wife for life; with remainder to W. D. for life; with remainder to W. H. D. for life; with remainder to the first & other sons of W. H. D., in tail male; with remainder to S. D. for life; with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male; with remainder to R. D., testator in the cause, for life; with remainder to the first & other sons of R. D., in tail male; with remainders over. R. D., the settlor, died in 1772, without ever having had any issue, leaving his wife surviving him. W. H. D., the son of W. H. D. in the will named, having, under the limitations in the will of the settlor, become entitled to an estate tail in the three estates, in 1806, suffered a recovery of estate B., & in 1816 suffered recoveries of estates A. & C., to the use of himself in fee, & by his will, dated in 1824, being then seised in fee of the three estates, he devised them to D. W. D., the son of testator in the cause, in fee, but charged with the payment of debts & annuities. W. H. D., the son, died in the same year, & thereupon D. W. D. entered into possession of estates A., B., & C. as devisee under the will of W. H. D. the son:—Held: D. W. D. had not come into possession of an estate entailed upon testator & his issue, in the sense intended by the will of R. 9673. —— Succeeding to estate.]—J., the great-grandfather of pltf. & deft., had three sons, O., N., & G., & on the marriage of N. he settled certain estates, called the Hickling, after a life estate, to N. to the use of the first & other sons of the marriage in tail male. N. died in his father's lifetime, leaving A., the eldest son of such marriage, who succeeded to the Hickling estates as tenant in tail. J. by his will of Dec. 1797, devised his other estates to the use of his son O. for life, remainder in default of issue to such one of testator's grandsons, A. & S., as O. should appoint for life, remainder to the first & other sons of such appointee in tail male. A. married twice. In 1804, upon the occasion of his first marriage, he covenanted to settle the Hickling estates to the use of himself for life, & after his death to the use that his intended wife L. should receive a certain annuity, & subject thereto to the use of himself in fee. Subsequently to this marriage, he barred the entail in pursuance of this arrangement; but L. died soon afterwards, leaving her son M. the only child of such marriage. In 1810, upon the occasion of the second marriage of A., certain proposals were adopted as the bases of a settlement, by which his uncle, O., under the power given to him by the will of 1797, appointed the estates devised by that will to A., according to the terms of such will. A marriage settlement was thereupon executed, by which A. conveyed the Hickling estates to the use of himself for life, remainder to trustees for a term of years for securing certain annuities, & subject thereto to the use of himself in fee. Deft. was the eldest & pltf. was the second son of that second marriage. O., the son of J., & the tenant for life under the will of 1797, made his will in 1822, by which he devised a certain estate, called the Iridge, in favour of his brother, G., & his issue, with a proviso that, if testator's nephew, A., & his first or other sons, should, in the lifetime of G., convey certain specified lands to G. in fee, the devise in favour of G. & his issue was to become void, & the Iridge estate was to pass to deft., second son of testator's nephew, A., for life, remainder to the first & other sons of deft. in tail male, remainder to the third & every other son of the said A., excepting always the eldest son successively in tail male. The will then contained a shifting clause, by which, after stating that the eldest son of testator's nephew, A., might die, so that the second or other younger son of his said nephew, A., might "become entitled to the property settled on the marriage of the said A., in the character of the then heir male of his body," it was declared that, in order to prevent the union of the two estates in the same person, whilst there was in existence a younger son of the said A., then in case the second or other younger son should by death or failure of issue male of the eldest or other son become entitled to the settled property of the said A., as the heir male of his body, the limitations in favour of such second or other younger son so becoming entitled should, immediately after such event, cease, & the next younger son of the said A. should become entitled to the estate as if his next elder brother, or issue male of his body, had been dead. Testator, O., died childless, & his nephew, A., with M., his son by his first marriage, fulfilled the terms of the proviso in the will of 1822, by making over the specified lands to G. conformably to such proviso, & deft. afterwards entered into possession of the Iridge estate. His father, A., died in 1856, having previously devised the Hickling estates to his eldest son, M., for life, remainder to his sons in tail male, with remainder on failure of such issue to his second son, deft., for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainders over. M., the eldest son, died a few months after his father, whereupon deft. entered into possession of the Hickling estates & of the property devised by the will of 1797, with the exception of the lands conveyed as above mentioned to G.:—Held: the contingency provided for by the shifting clause in the will of 1822 had happened, as deft., the second son of testator's nephew, A., succeeded as heir male of the body of his father to "the property settled on the marriage of the said A.," within the meaning of that clause, & therefore pltf., the next younger son, had become entitled to the Iridge estate.—MICKLETHWAIT v. MICKLETHWAIT (1859), 4 C. 9676. —— Acquisition of interest under substantially new title.]—Testator gave his Pembrokeshire estates in trust for T. C., second son of S. C., for life, with remainder to his first & other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to pltf. for life, with remainders over; & declared that if T. C. or his issue male should become entitled in possession to the estates in Shropshire settled on the marriage of S. C., the father of T. C., the trust for T. C. & his issue male should cease, & the Pembrokeshire estates should go to the person next entitled in remainder, as if T. C. were dead without issue. At the date of the will the Shropshire estates stood limited, under S. C.'s marriage settlement, to the use of S. C. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons successively in tail male. S. C. & his eldest son disentailed the Shropshire estates, & limited a small portion of them to S. C. in fee, & resettled the rest to such uses as S. C. & his eldest son should appoint, with remainder to S. C. for life, with remainder to his eldest son for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male, with remainder to such uses as S. C. & T. C. should appoint, with remainder to T. C. for life, with remainder to his first or other sons in tail male. By this settlement powers were given to S. C., to his eldest son, & to T. C., to charge certain sums on the estate. S. C.'s eldest son died without issue, & then S. C. & T. C. in exercise of their joint power of appointment, resettled the Shropshire estates after the death of S. C. to the use of the eldest daughter of T. C. for life, with divers remainders over until the entail in the Pembrokeshire estates should be barred & as soon as that event should happen, to the use of T. C. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male. On the death of S. C. pltf. claimed to be let into possession of the Pembrokeshire estates, on the ground that the shifting clause had taken effect:—Held: inasmuch as T. C. acquired an interest in the Shropshire estates under what was substantially a new title, & the estates were, moreover, diminished in quantity, the shifting clause did not take effect.—MEYRICK v. LAWS, MEYRICK v. MATHIAS (1874), 9 Ch. 9677. —— Being "entitled."]—Testator in 1855 devised his real estates to the use of all & every the sons of his nephew R. successively, for their respective lives, "other than & except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents, issues, & profits" of the C. estates "after the decease of R. as tenant for life or any greater estate or interest whatsoever." In 1869 R. & his eldest son, being then respectively tenant for life & tenant in tail in remainder of the C. estates, executed deeds under which those estates were disentailed & sold & the proceeds invested by trustees upon trusts under which the son took a beneficial interest. In 1875 testator died. In 1899 R. died:—Held: R.'s eldest son was not at his father's death "entitled" to the rents, etc., of the C. estates within the meaning of the exception clause, & was not excluded from the succession to testator's estates.—LAW UNION & CROWN INSURANCE CO. v. HILL, [1902] A. 9678. In whose favour operative—Persons "next entitled in remainder"—Trustees to present contingent remainders—In trust for next remainderman at particular time.]—By the will of M. T. the T. estates were settled on E. T. for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male. He had three children only, a son E. H. T. (pltf. in the first suit), a daughter, Mrs. L. (pltf. in the second suit), & a son, R. C. T., who died an infant & a bachelor. By the will of R. B. L. the L. estates were settled, among other limitations, upon E. H. T. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the second & other sons of E. H. T. in tail; & among the subsequent limitations was one to Mrs. L. for life. The will contained a proviso that if any of the tenants for life or in tail should become possessed of the T. estates, the limitations in his, her or their favour should from the time of his, her or their being so possessed cease & determine as if he, she or they were dead; & the L. estates were to go over to the person next entitled in remainder, it being the express wish of testator, R. B. L., that both estates should not vest in the same person. E. H. T., on the death of his father, became tenant in tail of the T. estates, & but for the last-mentioned shifting clause would have become tenant for life of the L. estates, on the death of the former tenant for life, in May, 1858. At that time E. H. T. had only one son, so that the limitations to the second & other sons under the will of R. B. L. could not then take effect. Mrs. L., who was the sole residuary devisee & legatee of the former tenant for life, set up a claim to the rents of the L. estates accruing during the life of E. H. T. During the progress of the two first-mentioned suits R. B. T., a second son of E. H. T., was born, & on his behalf, by the third suit, a claim to the same rents during the life of E. H. T. was made. E. H. T. claimed the same rents against both Mrs. L. & R. B. T., notwithstanding the shifting clause:—Held: the trustees to preserve contingent remainders were the persons

"next entitled in remainder" under the will of R. B. L.; but the proviso of the shifting clause excluding E. H. T. in existence at the death of the former tenant for life Mrs. L. was entitled to the rents till the birth of R. B. T., the second son; & such second son would be entitled to those rents so long as he continued such second son during the life of E. H. T.—TURTON v. LAMBARDE, LAMBARDE v. TURTON (1860), 1 De G. 9680. —— Not to different class of remainder.]—A. so devised his estate of G. that no female issue of any son of B., his first devisee, could take or inherit. B. being himself possessed of another estate of C. H., & having succeeded to the G. estate, made a will by which he devised his original estate C. H. to his sons successively in tail male; then to the children of his sons in tail general; then to his own eldest daughter for life. He added a shifting clause, declaring that his own devised estates should not be held or enjoyed by any one of his sons or daughters, or his, her, or their issue, after such son or daughter, or his, her, or their issue, should have come into possession of the estate devised by A.; but that as often as such estate of A. should come to the possession of any of his, B.'s, sons or daughters, or any of their issue, that then the person next in remainder under the limitations of his, B.'s, will, should be entitled to the C. H. estate; & so from time to time, as often as the event might happen, in such manner & as if the person so becoming possessed of the G. estate had died, or was then dead, without issue":—Held: "issue" here only meant those who would take under the limitations anterior to the devise "to the person next in remainder," & excluding them alone from taking under those limitations. The effect of the shifting clause was simply to propel or accelerate the next remainder, but not to carry over the estate in a different class of remainder.—JELLICOE v. GARDINER (1865), 11 H. L. 9681. Effect of clause—Acceleration of next remainder.]—A childless testator, being tenant for life of two estates with a reversion in fee in remainder on limitations to his sons in tail male, devised one of them, "in default of issue of his body, & subject to the life interest of his wife" therein, to trustees in fee, upon trust for E. for life, with limitations over; he charged the other estate with the payment of his debts, & devised it in the same terms, to the same trustees, upon trust, by mtge. or sale, to raise sufficient to pay his debts, &, subject thereto, in trust for R. for life, with limitations over:—Held: the words, "in default of issue of his body," must import issue "living at his death, & both devises were good."

Testator provided, that in case R., or any son of his body, should succeed to a certain family estate, the trusts declared by his will of his estates at S. & H., for the benefit of R., & such son so succeeding should cease, & the estates should be in trust for the person & persons next entitled to the same. R. became tenant for life, & his son tenant in tail in remainder, of the family estate, & of the estates at S. & H.:—Held: the father alone had succeeded, &, by the effect of the shifting clause, the estate of W., the son, was accelerated, & he was entitled to S. & H. as tenant in tail in possession.—BAGOT v. LEGGE (1864), 4 New Rep. 492; 34 L. 9686. Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 29—When applicable—Words explanatory.]—Testator, by will executed in 1838, gave the residue of his real & personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay an annuity to his wife, & to invest the sum of £1,000, & pay the interest to his son for life; &, after his decease, to any widow of his son; &, after her decease, upon trust, as to the principal, for his children; &, subject to the annuity & to the above & another legacy, upon trusts expressed thus: "In trust for all my children, in equal shares, & the heirs of their bodies (except as to my son, J., & his children & their issue, whose share, in consequence of the £1,000 set apart for him & them as aforesaid, shall be rated at £1,000 less than the share of any other of my children); &, in case there shall be a failure of issue of any of such children, then, as to the share or shares of him, her or them, whose issue shall so fail, to the use of the others or other of them, & the several heirs of their respective bodies." Testator was possessed of freehold & leasehold property, & left J. & one other child:—Held: J. was entitled in fee to half of testator's freeholds, & absolutely to his leaseholds; the parenthetical expression was merely explanatory, & above sect. did not affect the devise & gift.—GREEN v. GREEN (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 480; 18 L. With respect to real estate & apart from the statute, the words "dying without issue" mean the same as the words "dying without leaving issue," namely, an indefinite failure of issue. Now above Act directs that when you have words like these, which are open to three constructions, namely: death of the legatee in the lifetime of the tenant for life, without having issue living at the legatee's death; death of the legatee in like manner, without having issue living at the death of the tenant for life; & death of the legatee in the lifetime of the tenant for life, followed by an indefinite failure of issue; you are not to take that construction which gives an indefinite failure of issue (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—JARMAN v. VYE (1866), L. SUB-SECT. 2.—TO WHAT PERIOD CONDITION REFERS.

A. In General.

9691. General rule—Death at any time.]—(1) Devise & bequest of real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell, & pay, apply, & divide the moneys to arise by such sale into three equal parts: as to one, unto A.; as to another to B., & as to the third, to C., a daughter, for her separate use, & from & after her decease, leaving lawful issue her surviving, upon trust to accumulate the same, & to be paid to such issue, at twenty-one: proviso, "that in case any of my children or grandchildren shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue, then I direct that the share of him, or her, or them so dying, of & in the interest, rents, & annual income arising from the sale of my real & personal estate or otherwise, shall go to the survivors of them my children & grandchildren, as the case may be, their, his or her heirs, exors., or administrators, absolutely & for ever; provided also, that if any of my children or grandchildren shall happen to die leaving lawful issue him, her, or them surviving, then the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying, of & in the rents, interest & moneys arising from the sale of, etc., shall go to & be equally divided amongst such issue as they severally & respectively attain to the age of twenty-one years, who are to take per stirpes, & equally amongst them if more than one, & if but one, then such one to take the share his, her, or their parents would have taken if living.":—Held: the sons took life interests only.

(2) The words "In case any of my children or grandchildren shall happen to die without leaving lawful issue," held to mean "shall happen to die in my lifetime, or after my decease, without leaving lawful issue.

(3) The words "if any of my children or grandchildren shall happen to die leaving lawful issue him, her, or them surviving," held to mean "shall happen to die in my lifetime, or after my decease, leaving lawful issue him, her, or them surviving."

(4) Where there is a period of distribution fixed, & testator speaks of a death previous to that time, it must always be as a contingency of death prior to that period of distribution.

(5) If a legacy be given to A., & if he die without leaving issue, then to B., that period must refer to the whole life of the legatee.—GOSLING v. TOWNSEND (1853), 22 L. T. O. S. 125; 2 W. R. 23, L. C. & L. JJ.

9692. —— —— Unless contrary intention appears.]—(1) A bequest to A., & if she shall die unmarried or without children, to B., is an absolute gift to A., defeasible by an executory gift over in the event of A. dying, at any time, unmarried or without children. This construction can only be affected by a context which renders a different meaning necessary.

(2) A gift to X. for life with remainder to A., & if A. dies unmarried or without children, to B., is an executory gift over, which will defeat the absolute interest of A. in the event of A. dying, at any time, unmarried or without children.

(3) There is no rule of construction arising from possible delay in the vesting of a gift, which controls the natural meaning of the terms of the bequest.

(4) There is no authority that the words introducing a gift over in the case of the "death unmarried or without children" of a previous taker, do not indicate, according to their natural meaning, death unmarried or without children at any time, or that the ordinary & literal meaning of the words used is to be departed from otherwise than in consequence of a context which renders a different meaning necessary or proper. Gift of £1,000 Consols to A. for her life, after her death to her daughter B., "if B. should die unmarried or without children the Consols I here will to revert to C." The will then appointed D. residuary legatee. Both A. & C. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. On her death, B. entered into possession & married, but after some years died without ever having had a child:—Held: on the death of B. without children the gift over to the residuary legatee took effect, & it was not affected by the death of C. in the lifetime of testatrix. The gift to C. failed by lapse & the residuary legatee became enttled to take all that C., if living at the death of testatrix, could have taken.

(4) The words "I here will to revert to C." indicated a benefit intended 1or C. by means of an executory limitation over, after enjoyment by a previous taker, & not an alternate gift to take effect, if at all, before the period of enjoyment had commenced.

(6) The rule referred to by the Master of the Rolls may be more correctly stated in somewhat the reverse way to that in which it was stated by him in the case of Edwards v. Edwards, No. 9699, post, namely, that the period to which the executory devise will be referred will be the period of the death of the first taker, unless there are other circumstances & directions in the will which are inconsistent with that supposition (LORD HATHERLEY).—O'MAHONEY v. BURDETT (1874), L. The question is, to what period of time does this event relate. An abstract of title was duly delivered containing a full abstract of a will under which the property was sold. After the fourteen days had elapsed the purchaser made an objection as to the construction of the will. Testator had devised & bequeathed his real & personal estates to his wife during widowhood, & at her decease or marriage to his sons & daughters therein named in equal shares; & the will then proceeded as follows: "but if any of my children should die during my lifetime, or otherwise, leaving issue, such child or children, as the case may be, to have their father's or mother's share, to be equally divided between them absolutely." Testator's widow died in 1884, leaving all the sons & daughters named in the will her surviving, & all of them had attained twenty-one years. Such sons & daughters were the vendors of the property sold. One of their daughters had married in 1878:—Held: the children were entitled to their respective shares for an indefeasible estate in fee simple.—Re THOMPSON

On her death or remarriage he devised the former real estate to S., his heirs & assigns, & the latter to his daughter M., her heirs & assigns. The will provided, however, that in case of the death of either S. or M. without leaving surviving lawful issue the real estate devised to him or her was to go to the survivor of them, & in case of the death of either leaving surviving lawful issue it was to go to his or her child or children. On a summons taken out to determine whether, on the death of testator's widow, S. became indefeasibly entitled to the real estate devised to him or whether his children had any interest in it:—Held: he acquired on that event an indefeasible estate in fee simple in the property, since, in view of the use of words of inheritance in the devise, the time for the operation of the gifts over must be limited to the life of testator's widow.—Re BRAILSFORD, HOLMES v. CROMPTON & EVANS' UNION BANK, [1916] 2 Ch. 536; 85 L. Testator gave his personal estate, & the produce of his real estate, which was to be sold on his youngest child attaining twenty-one, between his children equally. There was a gift over, if any child should die after testator's decease without leaving issue surviving him, omitting the words under twenty-one. There were a maintenance clause, out of interest, & an advancement clause, out of capital, until the shares " should become payable & transferable," & which referred to the time when the legatees would be absolutely entitled to receive, as being on attaining twenty-one. A child died after attaining twenty-one, without leaving issue:—Held: his share did not go over, but belonged to his representative.—BROTHERTON v. BURY (1853), 18 Beav. 65; 22 L. T. O. In the judgments of LORD ELLENBOROUGH & MR. 9750. —— Gift of annuity.]—The principle of construction whereby, in the case of a gift over on death without "leaving" children, the word "leaving" is construed "having," so as not to take away an interest previously vested, will not readily be applied where the subject-matter of gift is an annuity, which ex vi termini involves the notion of personal enjoyment. Testator gave to his daughter L. an annuity during her life, payable out of the rents of leasehold property held for an unexpired term of about sixty years, & after the death of L. directed that the annuity should be payable half-yearly to & amongst such of her children as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, & if there should be but one such child, should be payable & paid to such only child, & in the event of the death of L. "without leaving" any such child testator gave the annuity which should fail by such death unto & among the survivors of testator's children & grandchildren. Testator directed that the leaseholds should not be sold, but he retained by his trustees, & the rents applied in payment of this & other annuities. L. survived testator, & had one child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of L.:—Held: the word "leaving" must be read in its literal sense, & the representative of deceased child was not entitled to the annuity, but the gift over took effect.—Re HEMINGWAY, JAMES v. DAWSON (1890), 45 Ch. D. 453; 60 L. J. Ch. 85; 63 L. T. 218; 39 W. R. 4.

9751. —— Necessity for vesting of interests.]—It is now a well-settled principle that, where there is a gift by will to A. for life, & after his death to his children in terms which give the children an absolute interest in A.'s lifetime, followed by a gift over "if A. dies without leaving children," the word "leaving" is so to be construed as not to destroy any prior vested interest: that is to say, "without leaving children" should be read as "without leaving children who have attained vested interests"; & this principle of construction is not affected by the circumstance that testator knew of the existence of a child of A. & that such knowledge appears on the face of the will itself.

Testatrix, after giving a legacy for the benefit of G. L. the younger son of her nephew G. L. the elder, gave her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, & out of the proceeds to raise & invest a sum of £1,000 & pay the interest thereof to G. L. the elder for life, & after his death to divide the capital amongst his children equally; & in case of his death "without leaving any child or children," same to fall into her residuary estate, which she gave to certain nieces equally. G. L. the elder survived testatrix & died, having had five children all born before the date of the will, of whom four died in infancy before that date. The fifth, G. L. the younger, named in the will, survived the testatrix and died in his father's lifetime:—Held: G. L. the younger took an absolute vested interest at birth, which interest became upon his death transmissible to his representatives.—Re COBBOLD, COBBOLD v. LAWTON, [1903] 2 Ch. 299; 72 L. J. 9755. ——.]—(1) No limitation over of a personal thing can be admitted after a dying without issue generally ; but if this is confined within a life or lives in being, or within ten months, or the birth of a child, or in case of the death of such child before the age of twenty-one, or if limited on a contingency to a person who never takes, the limitation is good. In this present case it is very clear that the words are restrained to legitimate children . . . dying without issue living at their deaths : The words are, If no legitimate son, etc., shall live to leave any child behind them, in such case of their dying thus without leaving any issue behind them, I will & direct, etc., in short few cases are so restrictive ; the first words spoke of his immediate issue, the subsequent are extended to more remote issue, but still are restrained to the case of dying thus, etc., so that no words can be more restrictive (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).

F. each one half of the produce of bank stock, & to their issue, & if either shall happen to die before the legacy became due to her, & leave no issue, the share of her so dying shall go to the survivor. F. L. died before testatrix, leaving a son, who has brought his bill for a moiety of the produce of the bank stock. The words leave no issue confine it to F. L.'s leaving no issue at the time of her death, & are relative to any child the legatee might have at her death, & therefore a moiety of the produce of the bank stock was decreed to the son of F. L.

The word issue is capable of three senses. In one sense as a word of description to take in joint tenancy, in another as a word of limitation, & in a third as a description of the person in remainder (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—LAMPLEY v. BLOWER (1746), 3 Atk. 396 ; 26 E. R. 1028, L. C.

The payment of £1,000 in the present case is equally strong in that respect, it being a personal provision & being to be made to a person or persons appointed by M. in her will, the event contemplated by testatrix, seems to have been approximate & not a remote event, namely, a failure of children or issue at M's death & not an indefinite failure of issue, which might happen at any remote period, & M. never having had any child, the event has happened on which those two tenements were given over (per CUR.).—DOE d. (B. being a daughter, & the other five, sons), to receive & take one-sixth part each of the rents, issues & profits of the estates during their life & lives; & after their respective deceases, in further trust, to permit the child or children of such of his sons or daughter so dying, to receive the rents, issues & profits of such share of the child so dying, in equal shares & proportions; & so in like manner from children to children; & devisor also willed, that in case either of his children should die without leaving issue, the rents, issues, & profits belonging to the child so dying should go to & be received by the survivor or survivors. A., C., D., & E., four of testator's sons, died without issue, & B., the daughter, also died, leaving one son & three daughters:—Held: devisor's children took estates tail; & upon the death of A., C., D., & E., their shares accrued to F. as survivor; & B.'s son was only entitled to one-sixth part of the rents & profits of the estates.—WOLLEN v. ANDREWES (1824), 2 Bing. 126; 9 Moore, C. Here is a devise to a parent for life, &, at her decease, the property is given to her issue, share & share alike, & if she depart this life without lawful issue, the property is given over. Now, as applied to freehold property, it is clearly established, that these expressions are to be construed as meaning a general indefinite failure of issue, which creates an estate tail in the parent (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—HEATHER v. WINDER (1835), 5 L. 9778. ——.]—A devised to B. in trust to permit & suffer his wife C. to receive & take the rents & profits for her own use for the term of her natural life; & after her decease in trust for all & every such one or more of the child or children of C., for such estate & interest as she should by deed or will appoint; & in default of appointment, in trust for all & every the child & children of C. &, if more than one, equally, & to their several & respective heirs, & in case C. should die without leaving issue as aforesaid, then to the heirs of C. for ever:—Held: by "issue," testator must be taken to have meant "children," & consequently the limitation over was not too remote.

The general rule of construction of wills, as established by a long course of decided cases is, that the words "dying without leaving issue," unless they are qualified & controlled by other words in the context, must be taken to refer to an indefinite failure of issue, & that any executory devise over which is made to depend on the general failure of issue, is void, on the ground of its being too remote (TINDAL, C.J.).—WALKER v. PETCHELL (1845), 1 C. 9780. ——.]—Testator by a codicil, made before Jan. 1, 1838, which he desired should be considered as annexed to & taken as part of his will, devised certain freehold land to P., to hold to P., her heirs & assigns for ever; provided that in case she should depart this life without leaving lawful issue of her body, then he gave & devised the same in manner & form by him given & devised by his will. By his will he had devised the land to W. to hold to W., her heirs & assigns for ever; provided, nevertheless, that in case W. should die without lawful issue living at the time of her decease, then the residue should go to and be possessed by P., her heirs & assigns for ever; provided also, that in case W. & P. should both die without leaving issue lawfully born of their bodies, then the land should go to the daughters of R. & F., & their heirs:—Held: by the codicil P. took an estate tail.

It was argued that, coupled with the words in the will, the devise to P. in the codicil was to be construed as giving her a fee simple with a conditional limitation over upon her dying without issue living at the time of her death . . . we do not feel ourselves at liberty to depart from the construction which has been long given to the words used in the codicil (POLLOCK, C.B.).—BISS v. SMITH (1857), 2 H. & N. 105; 26 L. But in case his niece should die without leaving any issue of her body at the time of her decease, or in case all such issue should die under the age of twenty-one years & unmarried, then to his brother's children. M. married & had one daughter, who attained the age of twenty-one years, but died in the lifetime of M. unmarried:—Held: if an estate in fee in remainder vested in the daughter of M. upon her attaining the age of twenty-one years, such estate was divested upon her death in the lifetime of M.—YOUNG v. TURNER (1861), 1 B. & S. 550; 30 L. If upon the proper construction of this will, the devise over was not to take effect until after an indefinite failure of issue, the limitation could not be supported as an executory devise, by reason of its remoteness (WILLIAMS, J.).—HARDCASTLE v. DENNISON (1861), 10 C. He then gave & devised other property of the like description to his son W., with a similar proviso in favour of J., in the event of W.'s dying without leaving lawful issue:—Held: the circumstance of the gift comprising leasehold as well as freehold, did not alter the settled construction of the words "dying without leaving lawful issue," as applied to the realty; &, consequently, testator's two sons took estates tail in the freeholds respectively devised to them, with cross-remainders in tail between them.

9812. —— —— Prior successive entailed interests.]—LEWIS d. ORMOND v. WATERS, No. 9028, ante.

9813. —— " Without issue as aforesaid."]—Where real & personal estates are given together for life, & so limited over that a child of the tenant for life would take a vested interest in the real estate at its birth, & in the personal estate at twenty-one, being a son or at twenty-one or marriage being a daughter, & there is a gift over in the event of the tenant for life dying without issue, it is intended a dying without such issue as would take by force of the prior limitations.

Testatrix, after bequeathing divers annuities & legacies, & amongst others, a sum of stock to M. to vest at twenty-one or marriage, devised & bequeathed a West India plantation, & all the residue of her money in the funds, after payment of the annuities & legacies thereinbefore bequeathed, & also her plate, books, & certain portraits to E. & T. for their lives equally, & after the death of either, the whole to the survivor for life, & after the decease of the survivor, then unto such children of T. as she should by deed or will appoint; & in default of appointment, then the plantation & the residue of the money in the funds to be equally divided among the said children & their heirs; & if but one child, the whole to such child & his or her heirs, the funded property to be an interest vested in them, being sons at twenty-one, & being daughters at twenty-one or marriage; but in case T. should die without issue of her body lawfully begotten, testatrix devised the plantation equally among all the children of A. & their heirs; & in case T. should die without issue as aforesaid, she then bequeathed her said residue of her money in the funds, & all her said plate, books, & portraits unto J. for life, & after his decease to his eldest son for ever: but, in case J. should die under age & without issue, then the said residue of her money in the funds, plate, books & portraits unto M. absolutely. All the rest & residue of her estate & effects testatrix gave & bequeathed unto E. & T. absolutely. T. having survived E. & died without having been married:—Held: J. took a life interest in the funded property; J. took no interest in the plate, books, & portraits, the limitation over of those articles being too remote; the stock legacy to M. which had lapsed by her death under age & unmarried passed under the residuary bequest of the funded property for the benefit of J. & did not sink into the general residue.

Suppose the clause had stood " without issue " alone, & the words " as aforesaid " had not been added, it might have been argued that this either meant a general failure of issue, or a failure of such issue as last mentioned, namely, the issue to take the plantation; the gift over of the plantation being the last antecedent. In that case, such an argument might have been more easily maintained than it can when the words are followed by the expression " as aforesaid "; yet even standing alone they could not, without difficulty, have this latter sense imposed upon them, namely, of reference to the last antecedent (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—MALCOLM v. TAYLOR (1832), 2 Russ. & M. 416; 39 E. children equally, &, in case of the death of any of his children leaving lawful issue, testator gave to such issue the share the parent would have been entitled to have:—Held: the residuary share of a child who attained twenty-one & died before the time of division passed to his representatives; semble: no child who did not attain twenty-one was intended to take any interest in the residue.

A question was made, whether, in the simple case of a direction to pay a legacy at a future period, without any gift of the legacy independently of that direction, the legacy would be transmissible to the representatives of the legatee dying before the time of payment; & the ct., in that simple case, has sometimes considered the time of payment as annexed to the legacy itself, & not merely to the payment of it. But the ct., in so deciding, has not, I conceive, intended to decide that the gift of a legacy, under the form of a direction to pay at a future time, or upon a given event, was less favourable to vesting than a simple & direct bequest of a legacy at a like future time, or upon a like event. If there is any case which decides, as an abstract proposition, that a gift of a residue to testator's children, upon an event which afterwards happens, does not confer upon those children an interest transmissible to their representatives merely because they die before the event happens, I am satisfied that case must be at variance with other authorities (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—LEEMING v. SHERRATT (1842), 2 Hare, 14; 11 L. 9849. ——.]—Testator devised an estate to his son A. for life, with remainder equally amongst all the children of A. & their heirs, as tenants in common. He devised another estate to B. & his children, in the same terms; & in case his son A. died without leaving lawful issue, he gave the estate so previously devised to A. unto B. & his heirs, & made a similar devise mutatis mutandis if B. died without leaving lawful issue; but if both his sons should die without leaving lawful issue, then he gave the estates over to C. in fee. Testator's son A. alone had issue, a son, & both the sons of testator, & also the son of A., died in the lifetime of testator:—Held: the gift over to C. did not take effect.

In such cases, the general term issue is construed to mean that particular description of issue before specified, namely, children (PEPYS, M.R.).—TARBUCK v. TARBUCK (1835), 4 L. J. Ch. 129.

Testator's son W. survived him, & had one child, who predeceased him:—Held: the limitation over referred to the death of either of testator's children without leaving issue living at his death; the child of W. took a vested interest at his birth, but liable to be divested by the death of W., without leaving issue living at his death, & the gift over therefore took effect.—WESTWOOD v. SOUTHEY (1852), 2 Sim. 9852. ——.]—As to the gift over, "in default of issue," it is scarcely contested, that it means in default of that issue which testator had before specified, that is, in default of the limitations in favour of those who were to take under those prior limitations.

The ct. must look at the expressions & context, with reference to the whole scope & object of testator, in order to see what he intended. Unless the limitations & expressions are identical, one man's will cannot control another's (ROMILLY, M.R.).—CORMACK v. COPOUS (1853), 17 Beav. 397; 51 E. R. 1087.

residue should go to the children of G. W., T. & D. all died, without leaving children, but one of them left grandchildren:—Held: "children" must be construed in its natural sense, & not so as to include grandchildren; that "issue" was not to be read "such issue," so as to be confined to children; & therefore, in the events which had happened, the fund was undisposed of.

If the primary limitation be in favour of children, & be so expressed that they take immediate vested interests, & there be a limitation over in default of issue, it is not difficult to see reasons for construing default of issue to mean default of children; for if there be no child there can be no other issue, & if there be a child, the child will take the whole & there will be nothing to limit over; but where the primary limitation is so expressed that there may be issue who may not take under it, as in the case of gifts to children to vest at twenty-one, it is not so easy to see the reasons on which this construction has prevailed (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).—PRIDE v. FOOKS (1858), 3 De G. & J. 252; 28 L. 9854. ——.]—A. gave his leasehold & general residuary estate to trustees, in trust, "as to the clear annual residue of his estate," to divide the same between his three daughters, N., P., & M., for their separate use; but in case any or either of his daughters should die, leaving lawful issue surviving, to pay such "shares or share" to the children of such one or more of them; & if one of his daughters died without issue surviving, upon trust to pay her "annual share" unto the survivors equally; & in case there should be only one surviving daughter during the continuance of the trusts, then the whole of his estate & effects was to be paid to such surviving daughter, for her own absolute use. All three daughters were married, & all died without ever having had children. The husband, as the representative of the survivor, Mrs. P., who died in 1857, claimed the whole of the estate, but the representatives of Mrs. M., who died in 1839, submitted that there was an intestacy. The ct. held, upon the whole language of the will, that pltf., as the representative of the survivor, was entitled to the estate & effects absolutely.—PULBROOK v. BRATT (1859), 33 L. T. O. There was a general residuary gift. One of the daughters executed the power & died, having had one child who died in her lifetime, leaving children who survived their grandmother:—Held: the words "die without issue" meant such issue as were previously mentioned, & the power was validly exercised. — Re MERCERON'S TRUSTS, DAVIES v. MERCERON (1876), 4 Ch. The will then gave various pecuniary legacies, with directions as to how they should be paid. T. had no children, & executed a disentailing deed by which he settled the property, with ultimate remainders, after the death of himself & his wife, to resp.'s predecessor in title. In an action brought to recover possession of the land from applt., who claimed under the son of W.:—Held: T. took an estate tail under the will, which was duly barred.

I take it . . . to be clear upon the authorities that if you have a gift to children, with words of division or of inheritance, the children would take as purchasers; & then if you have a gift over in the event of death without issue, those words pointing to death without issue are to be construed referentially, & to have their explanation from the gift to the particular individuals that you have had before (LORD CAIRNS).—BOWEN v. LEWIS (1884), 9 App. Cas. 890; 54 L. 9867. —— ——.]—The question upon the limitation over of this personal property in the event of both dying without issue under the age of twenty-one, is a mere question of intention, as it may be judicially collected from the whole will. If that limitation was intended to take effect after an indefinite failure of issue, it is too remote: if the failure of issue was confined to the death of the survivor, the limitation is valid. Cts. of Justice have uniformly endeavoured to support limitations of this description: taking advantage of any expression, from which the event may be construed, never having had issue, or may be confined to the time of the death (LORD ELDON, C.). — KIRKPATRICK v. KILPATRICK (1807), 13 Ves. 476; 33 E. If it should be more to the interest of his estate that the estates, or any part thereof, should be demised during his son's life, then testator directed the trustees to demise the same during his son's life. Testator died in 1824. His widow died in 1834. M., the son, died in 1850, a bachelor:—Held: the trust for sale was absolute, & the property must be considered as personalty, & the son of testator, in the events that had happened, took it as personalty, if he took it at all, as heir of testator. Qu.: whether the gift over on failure of issue of the son did not take effect; & also, whether any beneficial interest in the produce of the real estate was given by the will after the death of the son?—WHITE v. SMITH (1851), 17 L. 9879. —— —— Effect of Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 29.]—MORRIS v. MORRIS, No. 9999, post.

9880. —— —— ——.]—Testator devised a share of his residuary real estate upon trust for his daughter for life, & after her death to convey the same to or among such child or children of hers as should live to attain twenty-one years, or being daughters should live to attain that age or be married, & also such child or children of any son or daughter of testator's daughter as should live to attain twenty-one years, or being a daughter be married, in equal shares per stirpes; & he declared that if his daughter should die without leaving any lawful issue who should live to attain a vested interest, then her share should remain & be in trust for such other children of testator as should be living at the time of such failure of issue, & the issue then living of such of them as might be then dead. The daughter died without ever having had any issue:—Held: the gift over could not be split up into several gifts to take effect on several contingencies some within & some beyond the limits of perpetuity, but was a single gift to take effect on a single event which might or might not happen within those limits, & it was void for remoteness whether regarded as an equitable contingent remainder or as an executory devise.

It appears to us that above sect. does not apply to this gift, because it comes within the proviso to that sect. which prevents the enactment from extending to cases where the language refers to the event of no issue living to answer the description required for obtaining a vested estate by a preceding gift to such issue. It follows that the old law must apply, &, under the well-known case of Forth v. Chapman, No. 9752, ante, it appears to be clear that the gift over is to take effect on an indefinite failure of the vesting in the issue of the issue of M. [the daughter], an event which might happen either within or beyond the period of a life in being & twenty-one years afterwards (FRY, L.J.).—Re BENCE, SMITH v. BENCE, [1891] 3 Ch. 242; 60 L. J. Above sect. did not apply, & the gift over was void for perpetuity. Qu.: whether above sect. is intended to apply to the case of any but an entire failure of issue.—Re THOMAS, THOMAS v. THOMAS, [1921] 1 Ch. 306; 90 L. Testatrix died on Sept. 7, 1798, leaving T. her heir-at-law, & he had several children, the eldest born before the date of the will, & the youngest after the death of testatrix. The eldest survived all the others, & died in 1805. On the death of testatrix, T. entered into possession of the devised lands, & so continued until his death, on June 20, 1837, having in 1832 suffered a recovery of the lands to the use of himself in fee. E. died intestate in 1815, leaving M. her heir-at-law, who claimed against the devisee of T. two undivided third parts of the lands, as having passed to her under the will on the death of T.:—Held: the gift of £1,000 to E. was not intended to be personal to her & dependent on her being alive to receive it, but would be payable to her exors. or administrator, though not named; & there was nothing in the will to confine the words "happen to die without leaving lawful issue" to a dying without issue, which must receive their ordinary construction of a general indefinite failure of issue; therefore, the devise to R., E., & M. was too remote & void.—DOE d. The remainder after the limitation to A. for life void, as too remote; & A. being heir-at-law & residuary legatee, his title to the real & personal estate was established.

Sometimes the mode in which the subsequent limitations are made may indicate an intention to confine the failure of issue to the life of the person to whom the subject is given over; but I cannot conceive that the mere circumstances of a limitation for life to the next taker is of itself a sufficient indication of that intention (GRANT, M.R.).—BOEHM v. CLARKE (1804), 9 Ves. 580; 32 E. 9891. ——.]—Devise: I bequeath to my wife E. my real estate for her life, & then to be relinquished to my son B. at her decease. My will & mind is, that if my son B. should die without issue, my real estate shall go equally between my daughters M. & S., for the life of M. & at her death the whole of my real estate I bequeath to S. & her heirs. Testator also directed, that if B. should survive his mother, he should pay S. £5 within twelve months of the mother's decease:—Held: B. took an estate tail, with remainder to M. & S., & not a fee with executory devise to them.

The other circumstance, the life estate to M., is not more conclusive. If life estates only had been devised over, Roe d. Sheers v. Jeffery, No. 9770, ante, might have applied, & the terms "die without issue" might have been confined to a failure of issue at B.'s death; that is, if no distinction were to be insisted upon between "dying without issue" & "leaving no issue." D. Other Cases.

9893. Whether construed as indefinite failure—Gift over to specified persons living at time of failure.]—In a will, the words "failing the male issue," were, upon the whole context, construed to mean, "if there shall be no son then living." Testator having bequeathed a yearly sum to a person for life, gave the annuity, upon the death of the annuitant, to the eldest surviving son of A., &, failing the male issue of A., to the daughters of A. living at the demise of such male issue; at the death of the annuitant, A. had no son living, but had two daughters:—Held: the gift to the daughters of A. was not too remote, & they were entitled to the annuity. Testator gave the residue to his widow during her life, & at her demise, to the eldest surviving son of A. upon his attaining twenty-five, the trustees being directed to apply the interest to his use till he attained that age, or, failing such male issue, to the daughters of A. living at the time of the demise of the last of such male issue; the only son of A. died under twenty-five, in the lifetime of the widow, leaving two daughters of A. him surviving:—Held: if there had been any son of A. living at the death of the widow, he would have taken a vested interest in the residue, though he had not then attained the age of twenty-five: the gift over of the residue to the daughters of A. was not too remote & in the events which happened, they, upon the death of the widow became entitled to the residue.

Testator contemplated . . . that the daughters would be living at the time when the failure of male issue, which was present to his mind, was to take place; he contemplated that the failure, of which he spoke, would take place in the lifetime of the daughters. It is not reasonable, therefore, to suppose that he contemplated a general failure of issue (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).—MURRAY v. ADDENBROOK (1830), 4 Russ. 407; 8 L. J. O. S. Ch. 79; 38 E. R. 859, L. SUB-SECT. 9.—DEATH WITHOUT HEIRS.

9907. Whether construed as indefinite failure—Gift of personalty.]—Devise of personalty to B. & the lawful heirs of his body, if he should have any, but if he should die without lawful heirs, £1,000 to S. & £500 to C. the contingencies too remote.

The hardship of the construction is, that the words are carried back to the sense they bear as to real property, & then applied in the same sense to personal. . . . If they have been always held to mean a distant dying without issue, & it should be now held otherwise, it will shake the rule of property (LORD THURLOW, C.).—A.-G. v. HIRD (1782), 1 Bro. C. C. 170; 28 E. R. 1060, L. C.

9908. —— ——.]—If a term be bequeathed to A. & his lawful heirs, & if he die & leave no lawful heir then to B. the limitation to B. is good.

It is apparent on the will that testator by "lawful heirs" meant "heirs of the body," & "leaving no lawful heirs" must be confined to "leaving no issue at the time of his death" (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—GOODTITLE d. PEAKE v. PEGDEN (1788), 2 Term Rep. 720; 100 E. R. 388.

9910. —— ——.] — Testator, possessed of personal property only, by his will directed that the interest on his property should be divided into four equal shares; one share to be given to his wife for life, & then to devolve to his children & the longest liver in equal shares: the remaining three shares to be divided equally between his three children & their heirs; "should all my children die without heirs, my property in that case to be divided equally between the children of my brothers & sisters alive on the death of my last child." At the date of the will no brother or sister of the testator had died leaving issue:—Qu.: whether the limitation over in the event of all testator's children dying without heirs is void.

Did, . . . testator, by dying "without heirs," mean dying without issue living at the respective deaths of his children, or living at the death of the survivor of them? For, if he did not, the consequence must, I think, be, to say that he meant a failure of issue not confined as to time within legal limits; &, therefore, that the limitation under which pltfs. claim is void (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—GARRATT v. COCKERELL (1842), 1 Y. & C. An estate tail in the real estate: an absolute interest in the personal: the limitation over being void. But thus expressed, "if he leaves no "such heirs," it would be good; as confined to the time of the death, & not after an indefinite failure of issue.—CROOKE v. DE VANDES (1803), 9 Ves. 197; 32 E. 9912. —— —— Whether Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 29, applicable.]—Testator, in 1846, gave his residuary real & personal estate to J. S. L. & the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten for ever; but in case of his death without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to P. C. L. in the same manner; & if P. C. L. should die without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to J. S. A. in the same manner. By a codicil testator, after reciting that by his will he had directed that in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving" the residue of testator's real & personal estates should go to P. C. L. revoked that bequest, & in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," gave the residuary estate to the eldest daughter (if any) of J. S. L.:—Held: above sect. did not apply, & the gifts over to P. C. L. & J. S. A. were void as to the personalty, as being on an indefinite failure of heirs male, & the codicil did not alter their effect, & under the will & codicil J. S. L. took an absolute interest in the personalty, subject only to an executory gift over in favour of his eldest daughter if he died leaving no male issue surviving him.—DAWSON v. SMALL (1874), 9 Ch. 9913. Gift of realty.] — Testator gave £4,000 out of his personal estate to his daughter

C., & he directed his exors. to pay her the interest of £2,000 till she attained twenty-one, & he likewise directed his exors., or the survivor of them, as soon as convenient after his decease, to purchase an estate, not to exceed £2,000, for her use & her lawful heirs, which she was to come into possession of at twenty-one. He directed his daughter to receive the £4,000 at twenty-one if the land above mentioned was not then bought, & she was to give security for £2,000, to be returned if she died without lawful heirs, to his sons & daughters that had heirs, share & share alike; & provided the land be purchased, it was to be returned in the same manner:—Held: the £2,000 was to be considered as land, & the daughter took an estate tail in it; &, in the event of her death without issue, the limitation over took effect, giving to the son & other daughters estates tail.—SIMPSON v. ASHWORTH (1843), 6 Beav. 412; 7 Jur. 410; 49 E. R. 885.

Annotation:—Distd. Re Waugh, Waugh v. Cripps, [1903] 1 Ch. 744.

9914. —— ——.]—Testator appointed trustees & exors. of his will & devised certain real estate upon trust to pay the annual income arising therefrom unto his nephew, pltf., until he should assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of same or become bkpt., which of the said events should first happen, & if the trusts thereinbefore declared should determine in the lifetime of pltf. to accumulate at compound interest for the benefit of the male heir of his body till he attained the age of twenty-one years, & should he die without leaving a male heir, then testator directed his trustees to apply the annual income to pltf.'s brothers & the respective male heirs of their bodies successively according to seniority in tail, with remainder to pltf.'s sisters as tenants in common. Upon a summons by pltf., to which the remaindermen, pltf.'s infant son, & the heiress-at-law of testator were defts., for the determination of the quantum of the estate taken by him:—Held: but without prejudice to any claim which after pltf.'s death his heir male or the heir male of his body might make, pltf. took equitable estate in fee simple determinable on the happening of any of the specified events, which estate would on his death without the happening of any of those events become an absolute estate in fee simple, but subject to the executory limitations over to the remaindermen if pltf. should die without leaving any male heir of his body at the time of his decease.

In accordance with the spirit . . . of above sect. the phrase "die without leaving a male heir" (or male heir of the body) is here used in the literal & primary sense of the words, & that it is a failure at the death or not an indefinite failure of male heirs of the body that is referred to (JOYCE, J.).—Re LEACH, LEACH v. LEACH, [1912] 2 Ch. 422; 81 L. Annotation:—Apld. Re Thomas, Vivian v. Vivian, [1920] 1 Ch. 515.

9915. ——.]—In a will made since above Act, a devise of lands to A. & "at his death without an heir" to A.'s nephew must be construed as giving A. an estate in fee simple in the lands subject to an executory limitation over at his death if he should die without leaving an heir of the body.

This rule is well established & is stated in Hawkins on Wills, 2nd ed., p. 217, in the following terms: "If real estate be devised to B. on failure of heirs of A., & B. is capable of being heir to A., the word 'heirs' is construed to mean heirs of the body since otherwise the devise to B., could never come into operation." The rule applies to the present case, as deft. is capable of being the heir of pltf., & I must accordingly construe the words "without an heir" as equivalent to "without an heir of the body," so that in substance the devise must be read as a devise to pltf., his heirs & assigns with a gift over at his death without an heir of the body to the deft.

I have here the words "at his death without an heir," & I think the words "at his death" point to a punctum temporis at which it is to be ascertained once for all whether the contingency has happened on which the gift over is to take effect. The estate is not given over on an indefinite failure of heirs of the body, but only if there is no heir of the body at the time of the first taker's death. There is therefore no ground for cutting down the interest of the first devisee to an estate tail (EVE, J.).—Re THOMAS, VIVIAN v. VIVIAN, [1920] 1 Ch. 515; 89 L. J. Ch. 251; 123 L. T. 40; 64 Sol. SUB-SECT. 12.—OTHER CASES.

9939. Death without issue before fund payable.]—Testator gave stock to trustees, to be divided, after the death of two persons who had life interests in it, among A., B., C., D., & E., in equal shares; & he directed that, if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable, the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue should go to, & be equally divided among, the survivor & survivors of them. A. died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund: then B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue, before the period of distribution; shortly afterwards, & also before the period of distribution, C. died without issue :—Held : B.'s personal representative was not entitled to any portion of the fund; the one-third of B.'s share, which, on the failure of her issue, survived to C., did not, on C.'s death, survive to the other legatees, but was transmitted to her personal representative.

"Death without lawful issue" denotes generally an indefinite failure of issue. But in this case a time is limited, within which the failure of issue is to take place, & that is the time when the fund is to become divisible, & the shares are to be paid. Mrs. Powell had a son, who was living at the time of her death in 1927; but that son died without issue in 1799, during the lifetime of testator's widow, &, consequently, before the period when the shares of the stock became due & payable. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that Mary Powell took nothing under this will (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).—CROWDER v. STONE (1829), 3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J. O. S. Ch. 93; 38 E. R. 558, L. C.

9941. Gift over pur autre vie.]—The last class of cases referred to is the most important & most general; those, I mean, where, from the terms of the devise with reference either to the subject matter of the gift, or to the extent of interest given to the devisee or legatee over, a presumption is necessarily raised, inconsistent with the construction of an indefinite failure. If, for instance, the estate which testator is dealing with be an estate held pur autre vie, it is impossible that the gift over, after a general failure of issue, can tend to a perpetuity. If an estate held for the life of A. & B. be devised to C. for his life, & if he shall die without issue in the most general form, then over to D., it is perfectly clear that the limitation over must vest in D., according to the strict rule of law, within the compass of lives in being (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—CAMPBELL v. HARDING (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 390; 39 E. 9941a. Without legal issue.]—Testator, after devising certain leasehold property to his daughter E., said: "But should my daughter E. die without legal issue, then I give & devise the said property between such of my aforesaid children as may be then living; or if none of them shall happen to be then alive, I devise the property between my aforesaid grandson R. & the legal issue of my son S." :—Held : the words "without legal issue" did not mean an indefinite failure of issue of E., but a failure of issue at the death of E.; there being no limitation to the personal representatives of R., & it being therefore apparent that a personal benefit to him was intended by testator.—JONES v. CULLIMORE (1857), 30 L. T. O. S. 70; 3 Jur. N. S. 404; 5 W. R. 539.

9942. "In case of no lawful issue."]—Devise to E., the daughter of my sister A., for life, & from & after her decease to her eldest son then living, if any; "& in case of no lawful issue of any son" to the eldest son of my nephew J. then living, or unto the next eldest son of my nephew R. by lawful issue; "& I do intend & purpose that the messuages shall not be sold or divided, but always kept entire, & descend in perpetuity for ever to the eldest heir-at-law of B. & A."

E. died a spinster. Pltf. was the eldest son of J. & alive at the making of the will; & J. being the eldest son of B. & A. & J. being dead, pltf. was also the eldest heir-at-law of B. & W. :—Held : by the will, on the death of E., a spinster, the estate passed to pltf.; & the devise was not void for remoteness.—SAXTON v. CLAPHAM (1854), 23 L. T. O. S. 244.

9943. Gift over if issue do not "survive."]—The meaning of the word "survive" in a limitation of property is that the person to survive shall be living at the time of the event which he is to survive; it does not mean living at any time whatever after the event referred to. Consequently a gift over, if there should be no child or remoter issue of A., who should survive testator & A. & should live to attain twenty-one is not void for remoteness.

The word "survive," properly speaking, imports that to prevent this gift from taking effect the remote issue of the nephew must be alive at the death of the survivor of testator & his nephew (ROMILLY, M.R.).—GEE v. LIDDELL (1866), L. 9950. —— Death under twenty-one & before testator's widow.]—Testator bequeathed the residue of his real & personal estate, upon trust for his daughter, absolutely, upon her attaining twenty-one; provided that in case his daughter's decease should happen before the age of twenty-one, & his, testator's, wife should then be living, then in further trust to pay her the whole interest of the residue of his estate & effects; & on her decease, his daughter being dead before the age of twenty-one, he devised to his wife the house in S. Street, her heirs & assigns for ever; then in further trust to pay the produce of his residuary estate unto & amongst his nephews & nieces, the children of his sister Ann, & such of them as should be then living. The daughter died without issue in the lifetime of the wife. The sister had five children living at the death of the daughter, & one only, Isaac, living at the death of the wife:—Held: Isaac was entitled to the whole residue.

"And" construed "or" for the purposes of the construction of a will.—HETHERINGTON v. OAKMAN (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 299; 7 Jur. 570; 63 E. R. 131.

9951. —— Gift of rents to persons entitled to freehold & inheritance of same estate.]—Testator, tenant for life under a settlement of the B. estate & other lands, remainder to his first & other sons in tail male; remainder to A., his brother, for life, with remainder to his first & other sons in tail male; remainder to other brothers of testator in like manner; & after other intermediate limitations, remainder over to the sisters of testator as tenants in common in tail general.

Testator by his will gave certain specific things to be enjoyed by the person or persons who for the time being should be entitled to the freehold or inheritance of the family estate at Stapleton, as & in the nature of heirlooms. He gave his furniture, plate, etc., to his brother A. He directed a sum of £1,000, secured to him on the B. H. estate & other estates, to sink into the freehold "and" inheritance of the estates, that the same might merge them; & the rents & arrears of rent, with timber felled, & other annual profits due to him at the time of his decease from the B. estate, unto the person or persons who should be entitled to the freehold "and" inheritance of the same estate, in possession on his decease. He gave his residue to his two brothers, B. & C.; & he appointed his brother A. his sole exor. B. died in testator's lifetime:—Held: (1) in the gift of the rents, etc., the word "and" must be read "or" & they passed to A., although he was entitled only to the freehold.—STAPLETON v. STAPLETON (1852), 2 Sim. N. S. 212; 21 L. J. Ch. 434; 61 E. R. 321.

Annotation:—Mentd. Re Ford, Myers v. Molesworth, [1911] 1 Ch. 455.

9952. —— Death before tenant for life—& termination of succeeding life interest.]—"And" is construed "or" where one member of the compound sentence is included in the other, & would be superfluous unless disjoined. This construction is generally made in favour of vesting, not to defeat a previously vested gift.

A limitation of real estate to A. during the life of B. & C., without saying "& during the life of the survivor of them," gives A. an estate during the lives of B. & C. & the survivor. But a limitation for a hundred years, if A. & B. shall so long live, is determined by the death of either, because this is a collateral condition. Semble: these rules apply also to limitations of personal estate.—DAY v. DAY (1854), Kay, 703; 24 L. of money to his wife for life, & after her decease for A., M. & W., or such of them as shall be then living, & shall attain twenty-one or marry; & there was a power to the trustees to advance to A., M. & W. " not exceeding the share of each of them, my three children." A., M. & W. all survived the testator, & attained twenty-one; but A. died in the lifetime of the tenant for life :—Held : she took nothing under the above gift, the ct. declining to construe " and " as equivalent to " or."—MALDEN v. MAINE (1855), 2 Jur. N. S. 206.

9954. —— Alternative donees.] — Testator devised a freehold in trust, to accumulate the rents for periods of not less than ten years successively at a time, at the expiration of which, the accumulations to be paid to testator's " sons & daughters, or such of them as should be living at the respective periods of division, & the issue of such of them as shall have died leaving lawful issue, such issue taking their deceased parent's share, to be vested interests in the same respectively at the age of twenty-one years, & so on from time to time until the expiration of twenty-one years after the decease of the survivor of her children; & from & after the expiration of the term of twenty-one years, he devised the same premises unto such of his grandchildren & their issue as should then stand, in respect to him, in equal degree of consanguinity, & their heirs, as tenants in common :—Held : " issue " was to be read " children," & the word " and " to be read " or," & the devise was neither void for remoteness nor uncertainty.—MAYNARD v. WRIGHT (1858), 26 Beav. 285; 53 E. R. 908.

9955. —— Death in lifetime of testator—& before they shall have received any benefit.]—Testator bequeathed personal estate in trust to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, & after her death to divide the capital between his brothers A. & B. & his sisters C. & D. He declared that in case any of them should die in his lifetime " and " before they should have received any benefit from the bequest, then the share of him or her so dying should be divided among his or her respective children. A. survived testator, & died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, having bequeathed his share :—Held : " and " could not be read " or," & on the death of testator the share of A. was absolutely vested in him, & transmissible by his will.

I think upon the whole the sound construction is to adhere to the language of the will. I am invited to read the words " If either, etc., shall die in my lifetime, & before they shall have received any benefit," as if they had been " If either, etc., shall die in my lifetime, or before they shall have received any benefit "; & inasmuch as if either should die in testator's lifetime, he or she would die before he or she received any benefit, I am asked to deal with the words by analogy to those cases where the expression " dying unmarried & without issue " has been read as meaning " unmarried or without issue." But, as has been observed, not only would the change of words operate to divest the gift, but it would introduce a third contingency; namely, the death of the donee before the fund was distributed; an event which might be deferred to an indefinite period after the death of the tenant for life.

There is, moreover, an objection to changing the words in this case, which does not arise in the ordinary case of changing " unmarried & without issue " into " unmarried or without issue "; namely, that the change will render the first clause of the sentence inoperative. For these reasons I think the words must not be changed (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re KIRKBRIDE'S TRUSTS (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 400; 15 L. T. 51; 14 W. R. 728.

9956. —— Death under twenty-four & unmarried.]—Testator by his will gave his trustees all his residuary estate in trust for his two daughters in equal shares, subject as thereinafter mentioned. He declared that the shares of his children should be vested interests in them at the age of twenty-four or marriage with consent. The trustees were to pay the dividends to his daughters during their lives without anticipation. Each daughter was to have power to dispose of her share by will on attaining twenty-four. In case of the death of a daughter intestate her share was to go to the other. The trustees were to apply the dividends of the share of a daughter whose interest had not become vested for her maintenance, etc. Testator then declared that in case his daughters should both die under twenty-four & unmarried as aforesaid then he gave the whole of his residuary estate equally amongst his brothers & sisters. One of the daughters died an infant, & without having been married. The other attained twenty-one & married, but had not attained twenty-four : —Held : the gift over could not any longer by possibility take effect, the ct. refusing to change " and " into " or," or to give " unmarried " any other than its primary sense of " never having been married."—GONNE v. COOK (1867), 15 W. R. 576.

9957. —— To charitable & benevolent institutions.]—Testator by his will left the residue of his estate to trustees upon trust to divide the residue " among such charitable & benevolent institutions in Glasgow & Paisley & in such sums . . . as in their discretion may seem best " :—Held : the word " and " should be read in its natural meaning, not as " or," & the institutions intended were such as were both charitable & also benevolent; & the bequest was not bad for uncertainty.—CALDWELL v. CALDWELL (1921), 91 L. J. P. C. 95; 37 T. L. R. 953; 65 Sol. Jo. 765, H. L.

Pltf., one of testator's two daughters, had married, but had had no children & she was a widow over seventy years of age. The question was, whether she was now absolutely entitled to her share of the fund:—Held: pltf. was not absolutely entitled, the words "unmarried & without leaving lawful issue" meaning not under coverture at the time of her death.—Re KING, SALISBURY v. RIDLEY (1890), 62 L. J. married, but his wife predeceased him, & he died without having ever had any issue:—Held: "unmarried" must be construed in its secondary sense of "widower," since otherwise the words "& without lawful issue" were superfluous; & the gift over on J.'s death therefore took effect.—Re JONES, LAST v. DOBSON, [1915] 1 Ch. 246; 84 L. The daughter married & died under the age of twenty-one years without issue; but left her husband surviving her:—Held: the devise over did not take effect, as by the words of the will it was made to depend on the happening of the three events, dying under twenty-one, dying under that age unmarried & dying under that age without issue.

I cannot, however, reject from a will any word, unless I see that the meaning to be given to that word is contrary to some intention plainly expressed in other parts of the will (ABBOTT, C.J.).—DOE d. BALDWIN v. RAWDING (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 441; 106 E. R. 427.

testator has used the copulative word "and," & has devised his estate over in case his son died before twenty-one & without issue; that is, if both those events happened: why then should we read "and" as "or," & give the estate over upon the happening of one only of the events, when no inconvenience will ensue by construing the word used in its natural sense (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—DOE d. SUB-SECT. 2.—"OR" READ AS "AND."

A. In General.

9978. Whether "or" construed and" To put reasonable construction on will.]—A direction in a will, that the interest, with the principal of the residue of testatrix's real & personal estate, shall be settled on her daughter, or the heirs of her body, as the exors. shall think fit, will not empower them to give it from the daughter to the grandchildren; for, in this case, the word "or" must be construed "and," in order to put a reasonable construction on the will.—READ v. SNELL (1743), 2 Atk. 642; 26 E. 9979. —— Required by context.]—Testator bequeathed a leasehold house & premises, with the furniture & plate, to his son, & added, "& should he die without heir or will, the profits of the said house to be equally divided between all my grand children, by the consent of his mother":—Held: the son took an absolute interest in the house.

The first question is whether the word "or" is to be read in its proper sense or whether "and" is to be substituted for it. . . . The circumstance that "or" is in common parlance frequently used for "and" has apparently aided the cts. in the departure from the said rule of construction which requires cts. of justice to adhere to the proper sense of the words of testator except where upon the will itself or in the circumstances to which the will refers, there is evidence that testator did not so use them (per CUR.).—GREEN v. HARVEY (1842), 1 Hare, 428; 11 L. He then directed that his freehold house & his leaseholds, some of which were held for years, & others for years determinable on lives, should be kept in hand & let to the best advantage, & the produce be divided every half-year to the above-named L., M., N., O., & P., or to their lawful heirs; &, in case of there being no heir, the share or shares to be divided in equal parts among the surviving legatees. Testator, at his death, left L. his heiress-at-law & sole next of kin. M., N., O., & P., were not related to L., but were related to & capable of inheriting from each other. M. died unmarried in testator's lifetime:—Held: M.'s share of the residuary personal estate lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin; M.'s share of the freehold property did not lapse, but went to the surviving devisees; (1) the words "heir" & "lawful heirs" referring to heirs of the body; (2) "or" being construed "and."—HARRIS v. DAVIS (1844), 1 Coll. 416; 9 Jur. 269; 63 E. After testator's death, G. suffered a recovery, & died unmarried & without issue :—Held : in that event the devise over must take effect as a contingent remainder, & was therefore defeated by the destruction of the particular estate by the recovery.

aforesaid, should die without lawful issue, or such issue should die under the age of twenty-one years, then to testator's daughters, as tenants in common, & the heirs of their bodies. The son married under the age of twenty-three with the consent of the trustees, & afterwards attained that age:—Held: the son was seised of an absolute estate in fee; or if not under the words of the gift over, "shall die without lawful issue," he was seised of an estate tail, those words not being confined by the words, "or such issue shall depart this life under the age of twenty-one years," to dying without issue living at his death.—GRIMSHAWE v. PICKUP (1839), 9 Sim. 591; 3 Jur. 286; 59 E. R. 486.

9999. ——.]—(1) Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 29, has no application to cases in which the words "dying without issue" are combined with other words, such as "dying under twenty-one," which additional words, upon the authority of decided cases, modify their meaning.

(2) Testator devised an estate in fee to his son, but if he should die under twenty-one, over. By a codicil, he limited the estate over, in the event of the son dying without issue "or" under twenty-one:—Held: "or" must be read "and," & the executory devise over took effect only on the happening of both events, &, consequently, A., on attaining twenty-one, had an absolute estate in fee simple.—MORRIS v. MORRIS (1853), 17 Beav. 198; 1 Eq. Rep. 167; 21 L. T. O. S. 190; 17 Jur. 966; 1 W. R. 377; 51 E. R. 1009.

10000. ——.]—After various bequests of legacies a testator devised: "As to my real estate, if my daughter dies before she arrives at lawful age, or have no lawful issue, then I leave my real & all my other property to J. & H. equal between them; but in case my daughter shall have lawful issue, then I leave the whole of my property, real & personal, to her & her heirs":—Held: J. & H. would take only in the event of the daughter dying under age & having no issue; & the daughter, in fact, living to be twenty-one, but never having had any issue, J. & H. took nothing.—JOHNSON v. SIMCOCK (1861), 7 H. & N. 344; 31 L. J. Ex. 38; 8 Jur. N. S. 284; 9 W. R. 895; sub nom. JACKSON & SIMCOCK v. JOHNSON, 4 L. T. 836, Ex. Ch.

10001. ——.]—Testator by his will gave certain real & personal property to trustees in trust for his son J. for life, & after his death for his children in equal shares; but if his son J. should die under twenty-one without leaving lawful issue living at his decease, testator directed the property to be in trust for his other children in equal shares; & after further gifts testator gave the residue of his property in trust for his four sons, M., T., J., & C., but in case no child of his should live to attain twenty-one, or if none of them should leave lawful issue at his or her death, or respective deaths, then testator gave the residue to certain other persons. In 1863 testator died, leaving one daughter, A., & the four sons named in his will surviving. All testator's children attained twenty-one. J., who attained twenty-one in 1864, died without issue in 1868:—Held: the property of which trusts were declared in favour of J. & his children did not on J.'s death pass under the gift over to the other children of testator, but fell into the residue; & under the residuary gift the three surviving sons & the representative of the deceased son took indefeasible interests.—IMRAY v. IMESON (1872), 26 L. T. 93.

Annotation:—Refd. Wright v. Marsom (1895), 40 Sol. Jo. 67.

10002. ——.]—Testator gave two freehold houses to S. for her own use & disposal, "subject only to the following conditions, viz. in the event of the said S. dying intestate or childless or under the age of twenty-one, but not otherwise, the said two houses & premises shall become the property of" M. S. survived testator, attained the age of twenty-one years, & died a spinster intestate:—Held: a gift over in the event of the first absolute taker dying intestate & childless was void for repugnancy; the first or the second "or" must be read as "and"; & on this construction S. took absolutely & the gift over failed.

There is no doubt upon the authorities that if there be a devise or bequest to A. absolutely, but, if he die childless or under the age of twenty-one years, then over, the word "or" will be read "and," & the gift over will not take effect unless both events happen. This rule of construction depends upon a presumed intention of testator to benefit the children of A. directly or indirectly, an intention which would be defeated if A. died under twenty-one leaving children & the word "or" were construed disjunctively. The same principle is adopted where there is a devise or bequest to A. absolutely, but, if he die childless or intestate, then over, & that, too, though the substitution of "and" for "or" would make the whole gift over void for repugnancy (PARKER, J.).—Re CRUTCHLEY, KIDSON v. MARSDEN, [1912] 2 Ch. 335; 81 L. J. Ch. 644; 107 L. T. 194.

10003. —— Prior limitation in fee.]—In devise to one & his heirs, & if he should die before twenty-one or without issue then over, the ct. has said, it was not the intent to disinherit the issue, & therefore "or" shall be construed "and": but if the first limitation had been in tail, there would be no occasion to resort to that, but the ct. would have made the construction I do now; viz. if he dies without issue before twenty-one, then over by way of executory devise; if he dies without issue after twenty-one, when the estate had vested in him, it would go by way of remainder; because he had made his original devise capable of proper remainder; in which case the ct. will always construe it a remainder. An estate tail is capable of a remainder, & it is natural to expect a remainder after it (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—BROWNSWORD v. EDWARDS (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 243; 28 E. R. 157, L. C.

10036. —— ——.]—Where an estate has been plainly given in a will, it is not, from the use of subsequent words, to be treated as given upon a condition, if those subsequent words are capable of being interpreted, not as a condition imposed, but as a mere description of the event on which the gift is to come into existence.

W. devised to his brother C. for life, & in default of C. having issue living at the time of his death to his next brother F. for life, & in default of F. having issue living at the time of his death, to his youngest brother P. in fee. Testator then described how C.'s children should take, namely, in tail male, & went on thus : " & in case F. should come to the possession of the estate hereinbefore limited to him, & should die leaving issue, said issue to take in like manner," as before limited to the issue of C. F. died in the lifetime of C., leaving a son. C. died some years afterwards :—Held : the words " should come to the possession " did not constitute a condition which, not having happened, prevented F.'s son from taking under the will, & so created an intestacy, but he took under the force of the limitation created in favour of his father.

This seems to me precisely to fall in with the rule laid down by LORD HARDWICKE in Avelyn v. Ward No. 10201, post., where he said, " I know no case of a remainder or conditional limitation over of a real estate, whether by way of particular estate so as to leave a proper remainder, or to defeat an absolute fee before by a conditional limitation ; but if the precedent limitation, by what means soever, is out of the case, the subsequent limitation takes place." Here the preceding limitation is really in this manner out of the case, & therefore now, as he says, this limitation is to take effect (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—EDGEWORTH v. EDGEWORTH (1869), L. to dispose by will of one-half of the estate, & gave the other half after her decease to his sister J., or, in case of her predecease, to other persons; & he directed that, in case of his wife dying within twelve months from his own decease, his whole estate should go to his said sister, with a gift over as before in case of her predecease, & he made a similar provision with respect to one-half of the estate in the event of his wife omitting to make a will. Testator's wife died in his lifetime, & his sister J. survived him:—Held: the contingencies against which testator guarded, & which the ct., in construing the will, was bound to regard, were the event of his wife not being alive at the expiration of twelve months from his own decease, & the event of there being no testamentary disposition by her, &, in the events which had happened, the gift over in favour of testator's sister took effect.—DAVIES v. DAVIES (1882), 47 L. The three sons, having survived testator, were held to be absolutely entitled, the gift over on death before execution of the trusts being void for uncertainty.—ROBERTS v. YOULE (1880), 49 L. J. Ch. 744.

10041. —— ——.]—Where a legacy is absolutely vested it cannot be divested by a subsequent gift over in the event of the legatee dying before he has received the legacy. A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for all his children who should attain the age of twenty-one years, as tenants in common, but so that they should not be entitled to receive their respective shares until the youngest child attained the age of twenty-one years, unless the trustees of the will should in their discretion consider it proper that the shares, or any of them, should be paid; & the testator directed that in case any child should die before the youngest attained the age of twenty-one years & without having actually received his share, then that share should go over to the other children:—Held: each child on attaining the age of twenty-one years acquired an indefeasibly vested interest in his share.

This principle has been acted upon for ninety years . . . that when there is a gift of property with a gift over if the legatee dies without receiving it, that gift over is too vague & indefinite; it is simply regarded as void, & the original gift remains (MALINS, V.C.).—BUBB v. PADWICK (1880), 13 Ch. A. dies without having been married:—Held: the first class of legacies fail, & A.'s personal representatives are entitled to the fund absolutely, subject to the second class of legacies.—SWAYNE v. SMITH (1822), 1 Sim. & St. 56; 1 L. The words "in case of death" were held to refer to death in the lifetime of the tenant for life of the £1,000.

The rule which generally refers the words "in case of death" to death in the lifetime of testator is certainly not inflexible. When the bequest is immediate & direct, & no life interest is given, there is but one period to which it can be referred, death before testator: but where there is an intervening life interest the words may have reference to the time of the termination of that interest (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—GREEN v. BARROW (1853), 10 Hare, 459; 21 L. He then gave certain leaseholds to his daughter M., a married woman, for her own proper & absolute use & benefit; & afterwards provided, that in case she should die, the premises should go & be for the sole use & benefit of her children living at her decease. Testator appointed M. his sole extrix. M. survived:—Held: the subsequent gift for the benefit of her children was only substitutionary, to prevent a lapse in case of her decease before testator; & as she survived testator, it did not cut down the absolute interest given to her in the first instance; & the property was therefore held to belong to her husband, & to pass to his assignees in bkpcy.—TAYLOR v. STAINTON (1856), 2 Jur. 10068. ——.]—Testator left legacies to three persons, & if any of them died their share was to go to the others. Testator's widow died in 1838, & one of the daughters died in 1849, without having been married:—Held: the period for division as to the daughters' shares was not the death of the tenant for life, but the deaths of the daughters; & the gift over upon dying unmarried was not to be restricted to dying unmarried in the lifetime of the tenant for life.—Re WALKER'S TRUST, Ex p. PIPER (1852), 19 L. The elder sister married & had children:—Held: the gift over to the surviving sister, on the contingency of the death of the other before marrying & having children, was referable to such death occurring before she should attain the age of twenty-five years; & the younger sister on attaining twenty-five, though still unmarried, became absolutely entitled to a moiety of the property.—CLARK v. HENRY (1871), 6 Ch. E. Gifts Over on Death before Vesting.

10102. General rule—"Vested" construed in technical sense.]—Testatrix directed that her trustees should stand possessed of the residue of her estate in trust as to one moiety, & the dividends thereof, to pay same to her daughter A. for life, & then upon trust as to the moiety & the dividends & accumulations thereof until it should be payable & distributable, to pay same to the children of A. who should survive her, at twenty-one, with benefit of accruer & survivorship; & she gave the other moiety in similar terms to her daughter B.; & in case, at the decease of either of her daughters, there should be no children of such daughter who should have lived to attain a vested interest under the trusts of the will, then the moiety of such daughter so dying & the dividends & accumulations thereof, to be held upon trust for the other daughter for life, & her children afterwards; & if upon the death of the survivor of the two daughters there should be no child or children of either who should have lived to attain a vested interest under the trusts in the two moieties, then the entirety of the two moieties & the dividends & accumulations thereof to be held in trust for testatrix's six nephews & nieces on attaining twenty-one. The daughter A. died before testatrix, & she then made a codicil directing that her moiety should go to B. in the same manner as it would have gone to A. if she had lived; & she gave an annuity for the maintenance of the only daughter of A. until she should attain twenty-one. B. died, leaving six children, infants:—Held: the interest of the six grandchildren of testatrix was not vested until they attained twenty-one, & the dividends must be accumulated; & the nephews & nieces were not entitled, under the gift over, until default in the attainment of twenty-one by the grandchildren.

The words "vested interest," according to the context, although not according to their primary signification, might be held to refer to a different species of vesting, a vesting in possession or enjoyment. But it must be seen whether the context absolutely requires such a construction, & if it does not, the words "vested interest" must have their primary meaning (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—BULL v. JONES (1862), 31 L. By a subsequent codicil, after reciting that he had devised the reversion in fee in this estate to his son J., & also that he had devised other estates to trustees for his use until he should attain twenty-one, & thereupon to him in fee for ever, proceeded & declared his will to be, that in case his son should die without leaving lawful issue of his body living at his decease, & before the several estates should become vested in him by virtue of the several limitations aforesaid, the estates should go over. J. survived testator, attained twenty-five, & died without having had any children. H. died unmarried many years after J. On the question who was entitled on the death of H. to her estates:—Held: the word "vested" in the codicil meant vested in interest, & not

PART XVI. SECT. 25, SUB-SECT. 2.—D.

10099 i. General rule—Death at any

10099 ii. —— ——.]—Testator directed the annual interest on a sum of £1,500 to be paid to his sister C. for life, & after her death to be paid to C.'s daughters A. & J. until marriage, &, "in case both the said nieces should die unmarried or be married without issue," testator directed the £1,500 to be paid to such of C.'s children as C. should appoint, & in default of appointment to the exors. & administrators of C.:—Held: by the words "die unmarried without issue," testator meant the dying of his nieces without issue living at the time of death, at whatever time that death should happen.—Re CREAGH, BURTON v. TURNER, [1920] 1 I. R. 8.—IR.

vested in possession; consequently, on testator's death the estates vested at once in interest in J., subject to the estates of H. & her issue; &, on H.'s death without issue, passed to J.'s devisees.

(2) Where the words of survivorship occur in an instrument in which a period for payment or distribution is named, that period is the time to which the surviving is to be referred; where a testator in a will, which is considered to speak from the time of his death, used the words "before the share or estates becomes vested," he must, primâ facie, be taken to mean something more than "before my death" (CHANNELL, B.).

(3) There is no difference between real & personal estate, so as to prevent the application to real estate as well as to personal of the rule in Young v. Robertson, No. 10293, post, that words of survivorship should be referred to the period of distribution where it appears from the collocation of the words that it was the intention of the testator to do so (CHANNELL, B.).—RICHARDSON v. POWER (1865), 19 C. B. N. S. 780; 35 L. J. C. P. 44; 11 Jur. N. S. 739; 13 W. R. 1104; 144 E. R. 994, Ex. Ch.

10104. When "vested" construed to mean "payable."]—Testator devised & bequeathed all his real estate & his convertible personal estate to trustees, upon trust to convert same into money, & thereout to pay his debts, funeral expenses, & a weekly sum to his wife, & to divide the residue of his estate & effects equally between & among his children, J., M., & C. & his grandson R., share & share alike; the share of M. to be paid her as soon after his decease as conveniently might be, the share of C. to be paid him at the age of twenty-two, & the share of R. at the age of twenty-one; & in case any of his children or grandchild should die before his or her share should become so vested as aforesaid, then the share or shares of him, her or them so dying, should go & be equally divided among the survivors & survivor of them in equal shares & proportions, if more than one, & if but one, then the whole to & for the use & benefit of such survivor. J. & C. died in testator's lifetime, the latter being under twenty-two. R. survived testator, but died under twenty-one:—Held: (1) the word "vested" must be construed to mean "payable" & the original shares of the deceased children & grandchild survived to the survivors; (2) the word "whole" meant the whole residue, & the accruing as well as the original shares devolved to M., as the sole survivor of the four residuary legatees.—SILLICK v. BOOTH (1841), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 117; 6 Jur. 142; 62 E. R. 816.

Annotations:—Refd. Dutton v. Crowdy (1863), 33 Beav. 272. Mentd. Underwood v. Wing (1854), 19 Beav. 459.

10105. When "vested" construed to mean "vested in possession."]—Testator by his will directed a fund to be set apart to answer an annuity which he directed to be paid to his widow. After her death he directed the fund to form part of his residuary estate; & he bequeathed his residuary estate to all his children equally, to be divided between them; with a proviso that, if any child should die, either in his lifetime or after his decease, & before the part or share bequeathed to such child should become a vested interest, without leaving issue, then such share should go to the survivors; but in case any child should die leaving issue, then such issue should take their parent's share:—Held: the second branch of the proviso must be read in connection with the first, & in both the death contemplated was a death before the share vested in possession.

In the case of this particular will, I think, that, in the passage, "before the part or share, so bequeathed to them as aforesaid, shall become a vested interest," the words "vested interest" should be construed to mean an interest in possession, because testator prefaces the above passage by the following provision: "in case either of my children shall happen to die, either in my lifetime or after my decease"; & if the word "vested" had its ordinary signification, a child could not die after testator's death before his share became a vested interest. Something beyond surviving testator is therefore intended (KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C.).—KING v. CULLEN (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 252; 64 E. R. 113.

10106. ——.]—Testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees to pay the interest to his wife for life, & after her decease he gave four-sixths of the capital to each of his four brothers & disters, & in case of the death of any or either of the legatees in his lifetime, the sixth part of him or her so dying to go to his or her children. He then gave the remaining two-sixths to the children of a deceased brother & sister; provided always, that in case of the death of any or either of his legatees before their respective shares should have become vested, the share or shares of him or her so dying was to sink into the residue, & go to the survivors as if the legatees so dying had not been named or had never existed. One of the legatees survived testator, but died in the lifetime of his widow, the tenant for life:—Held: her representatives were not entitled to her share, but it sunk into the residue as if she had not existed.

It appears to me impossible to hold that the words "become vested" can be used in any other sense than vested in possession, which could not be the case until the death of the tenant for life (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—Re MORRIS (1857), 26 L. J. Ch. 688; 5 W. R. 423.

Testator left five brothers & sisters; two of whom died in the lifetime of A.:—Held: the word "entitled" had reference to the death of testator, & not to the death of A., & the shares had therefore vested absolutely in the brothers & sisters, & the representatives of each of them who had died were entitled to a fifth of the fund.—HENDERSON v. KENNICOT (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 492; 18 L. All of the three last-mentioned legacies testator directed should be paid by his trustees at the end of seven years next after his decease; & he directed that, in case of the death of J. & S. respectively before they became entitled to the legacies above mentioned, leaving lawful issue him or her surviving, the legacy of him or her so dying should go & be equally divided between & amongst his or her issue at the end of seven years next after testator's decease, in case such issue should then have attained the age of twenty-one years, but if they should not then have attained the age of twenty-one years then when & as they respectively attained that age. Testator died in Sept. 1861. J. died in Feb. 1864, within seven years after testator's death. He left two children & a grandchild. The question arose between them & his exors. whether, in the events that had happened, the gift over of his legacy had taken effect:—Held: the words "become entitled" did not mean "become entitled in possession"; therefore, notwithstanding that J. died within seven years after testator's decease, the gift over of his legacy did not take effect; but he became entitled thereto indefeasibly on testator's death.—Re CROSLAND, CRAIG v. MIDGLEY (1886), 54 L. 10126. Death of cestui que vie.]—Testator gave his residue to his "first & second cousins" who should be living at the death of the survivor of his wife & sister, "including his reputed cousin A. & his children or reputed children." By a codicil to his will he gave £100 to each of his cousins J. & G., in addition to any sum to which they might be entitled under his will. The codicil also contained a gift over "if any of his first or second cousins should die before the payment of any sum or shares thereby or by the will directed to be paid to him." Testator had no second cousins at the date of his will or of his death some four years after. A. was illegitimate, but if legitimate he should have been a first cousin of testator, & his children first cousins of testator once removed:—Held: the gift over in the codicil was a gift to the children of any cousin of the sum or share to which he would have been entitled if he had survived the time of payment, & it therefore took effect only in the event of the death of a member of the class before the death of the survivor of testator's wife & sister.—WILKS v. BANNISTER (1885), 30 Ch. 10145. Gift over on death during minority of named person.]—Testator directed his trustees to receive the rents of all his real estate for maintenance of all his children, during the minority of H., his youngest child, & on her attaining twenty-one, he gave to five of his sons, whom he named in descending order of birth, estates tail in five several portions of his real estate respectively, & he provided that in case any of these five sons died "during the minority of H. as aforesaid, or in the event of any of them dying without having such lawful issue as aforesaid, & either before or after their or his share should be divisible," then the share of deceased son should accrue to testator's "next surviving son according to seniority of age & priority of birth":—Held: on the death of one of the five sons during the minority of H., though leaving issue inheritable, the gift over took effect.—EASTWOOD v. LOCKWOOD (1867), L. 10146. Gift over on death before division of estate.]—Testator gave his real estate & the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust with all convenient speed after his death to sell & convert the same, & to hold the proceeds on trust to pay his debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, &, subject thereto & to the payment of an annuity, to divide the residue of the trust moneys into six equal parts, among two nephews & four nieces of testator named in the will. He directed that the shares of the nephews should be paid to them as soon after his death as possible. He directed that the trustees should invest the shares of the nieces & pay the income thereof to them for their separate use. He directed that, in case any of his nephews should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed, his share should go over; & there was a similar direction with regard to the share of any of the nieces who should die before him, or before the division of his estate as before directed:—Held: the "division" of testator's estate meant the expiration of twelve months from his death, & the share of one of the nieces, who survived him but died within that period, went over.—Re COLLISON, COLLISON v. BARBER (1879), 12 Ch. 10147. Gift over on death during continuance of trusts.]—Testator, who died in 1876, by his will gave a freehold house to trustees upon trust, as soon as conveniently might be after his death, to let the same upon certain terms; & until the granting of a lease, the trustees were to permit the business at the house to be carried on by testator's son R., & his daughter M. for the benefit of his estate. Subject thereto testator gave the house & all his residuary real & personal estate to his trustees upon trust to sell & convert "as soon as conveniently might be after his death," & to hold the proceeds in trust for all his children equally; provided that if any child of his should die in his lifetime "or during the continuance of the trusts hereinbefore declared" leaving issue, such issue should take by substitution the parent's share; & if any son of his should die in his lifetime "or during the continuance of the trusts hereinbefore declared," leaving a widow & no issue, such widow should take the share of her deceased husband, for her life, & after her death the share should form part of testator's residuary estate. The trustees had full powers as to mode, time, & place of sale of any of the property directed to be sold. In 1878 the trustees let the freehold house. In 1881 one of the sons died intestate, & without issue, leaving a widow. The question was whether, on the death of the son, his interest in the residuary property was divested:—Held: the absolute interests given to testator's children became indefeasible at the latest when the lease of the house was completed, & the business was no longer carried on for the benefit of the estate; & the share of deceased son would devolve, subject to his funeral & testamentary expenses, & debts, as to one moiety to his widow, & as to the other to his next of kin.—Re TEALE, TEALE v. TEALE (1885), 53 L. 10150. ·.]—Where there is in a will a limitation over, which, though expressed in the form of a contingent limitation, is in fact merely dependent upon a condition essential to the determination of the interests previously limited, the ct. is at liberty to hold that, notwithstanding the words in form import contingency, they mean no more, in fact, than that the person to take under the limitation over is to take subject to the interests so previously limited. But in order that this rule of construction may be applied, the condition, upon which the limitation over is made dependent, must involve no incident but what is essential to the determination of the interests previously limited.

Testator by his will directed that, when the youngest of his two daughters had attained twenty-one, his real & personal estate & effects should be divided into three equal parts, one part to be for his wife, & one of the remaining two for each daughter; at his wife's decease her share to be equally divided between his two daughters; & provided either of his two daughters should die before a division of the property should have been made, & having no issue, then the part of the deceased to be given to her surviving sister. By a codicil, should both his children die in their minority & leave no issue, then in such case, & in such case only, he gave the whole of his property to his wife for life, with remainder over. The elder daughter attained twenty-one, but both died before the younger attained that age & without having been married: — Held: whether the interests under the will were vested or not, & whether a reasonable motive could or could not be assigned for the condition upon which testator had made the limitation over in the codicil to depend, the death of both his daughters in their minority, that condition must be construed strictly; & the event not having happened, the limitation over held not to take effect. Semble, the interests under the will were vested interests.

The gift over, in the event of either of testator's daughters dying leaving children, to the children of that daughter, is only a gift of the original share of the daughter so dying, nothing being said as to any share that might come to her by accretion (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—MADDISON v. CHAPMAN (1858), 4 K. & J. 709; 70 E. 10152. ——— –.]—Testator, being possessed of a leasehold interest in some business for ninety-nine years, by his will gave to his widow, P., £17 per annum & a house; to his daughter E., three other houses at the decease of P.; to his daughter M., another house after the decease of P.; he made his son (deft.) his residuary legatee & devisee. He further declared that deft. was also to keep E.'s & M.'s houses in repair & likewise to pay the high rent on the whole during the lease while they kept the lease in their possession, that they had also a power to sell their property, if they chose, for their life, & that should either of the daughters decease, her share was to go to the survivor. M. died first, then E., & then P. Pltf., who was the husband of E., sued in ejectment to recover the houses bequeathed to M. & E.:—Held: the interests devised to E. & M. were not contingent on their surviving P., the widow, & the bequests to them were to be construed merely as being subject to the interest previously created for the life of P.—CHELLEW v. MARTIN (1873), 28 L. T. 662; 21 W. R. 671.

10153. —— ——.]—Testator devised his real estate to his grandsons for life, with remainders to their sons in tail successively, & upon the death of the grandsons without issue he devised the estate to his three granddaughters in tail with benefit of surviviorshp, & in case the granddaughters should die without issue, leaving their father & mother, or either of them, surviving, then he devised the estate to the father & mother, & the survivor of them, for life, & after their death to T., J., & G., in fee. The grandsons survived testator, but died without issue. One of them also survived the granddaughters, & one of the granddaughters survived both her father & mother:—Held: the devise of the estate for life to the father & mother of the granddaughters was not a contingent remainder, & the ulterior limitations took effect, notwithstanding the death of both father & mother, in the lifetime of the tenants in tail.

One of the rules of construction laid down in Powell on Devises is, "Where an estate in remainder is limited in view of contingency on the happening of certain events, or the events described as precisely those on which (the preceding estates having determined) it will fall into possession, it is construed to be not a contingent gift conditioned to take effect on these events, but a devise immediately vested, the possession of which is necessarily dependent on the events in question." This rule could not have been more accurately framed to meet this case (LUSH, J.).—LEADBEATER v. CROSS (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 18; 46 L. J. Q. B. 31; 35 L. T. 803; 25 W. R. 96.

10154. —— ——.]—Testatrix in this case by her will gave certain real estate to trustees upon trust to pay to or otherwise permit E. to receive the rents & profits thereof for her life, & after her decease, upon trust to pay to or otherwise permit A. to receive the rents & profits thereof for her life, if she should be living at the time of the decease of E., but if she should be then dead, upon trust for two nieces of testatrix's late husband, whom she named, absolutely as tenants in common; & testatrix gave all the residue of her estate to A. absolutely. E. survived testatrix, & A. survived E., & consequently her life interest took effect. She was now dead, the two nieces being living, & the question was raised whether the estate went to the two nieces, or whether, inasmuch as A. did not die in the lifetime of E., the gift to them failed, & the estate went to A.'s representatives, being given to her absolutely by the joint operation of the gift of the life interest & of the residue:—Held: the property went to the two nieces, the gift to them not being a contingent remainder, but an imperfect expression of testatrix's intention that, subject to the two life interests, the nieces were to take absolutely.—Re MARTIN, SMITH v. MARTIN (1885), 54 L. J. Ch. 1071; 53 L. T. 34.

10155. —— As executory devise or contingent remainder.]—Though a gift over may as to one alternative operate as an executory devise it will not necessarily do so as to another; & if the second is that which in fact occurs, the gift may be treated as a good contingent remainder. The invalidity of one alternative will not necessarily defeat the other.

There were similar devises to J. & S., but in the devises to J. & S. nothing was said as to total absence of issue ; in that to A. the words used were " & further, in case A. shall die without issue." E. first & A. afterwards died without ever having had a child :—Held : (1) on the death of A. the gift over in favour of a daughter of J., who had attained twenty-one, took effect as a contingent remainder, because no prior estate was divested or displaced, & when the particular estate, the life estate of A., determined the contingency on which the remainder was to take effect, had occurred ; (2) though the gift over, on the death of E.'s sons under twenty-three, was void for remoteness, the gift over on her death without having had issue, was not thereby affected.

(3) A. died without ever having had issue :—Held : though in the devise to her the not having issue was not expressed, it was necessarily implied in the provision as to her dying without children who should attain twenty-three or twenty-one, & therefore on her death without ever having had issue, the gift over took effect.—EVERS v. CHALLIS (1859), 7 H. Testator by his will, dated in Feb. 1881, devised & bequeathed to his wife, A., the income arising from the whole of his estate during her life, provided she remained a widow ; & from & after her decease, or when she married again, testator devised & bequeathed the whole of his estate & effects, real & personal, to his daughter K. provided she had attained the age of twenty-one, & if she had not attained such age at the time of the decease of his wife A., or when she should marry again testator directed that the income from his estate should be applied towards the maintenance of K. until she attained the age of twenty-one, & in the event of K. dying during the lifetime of his wife A., then at the decease of A., testator devised & bequeathed the whole of his above-mentioned estate in favour of his brothers & sisters as therein mentioned. Testator died in Mar. 1881, & his daughter K. died in June, 1881, under the age of twenty-one. Testator's widow, A., married again in Dec. 1882 :—Held : the gift over took effect on the second marriage of A. because the intention of testator was that the gift over should take effect upon the determination of the prior interest on either the death or the second marriage of A.—STANFORD v. STANFORD (1886), 34 Ch. The testator gave £5,000 to his trustees to be divided among such charitable institutions as his wife should by her will name & appoint; & gave his residuary estate to three persons in equal shares. 10169. —— ——.]—A man, taking for granted that his wife was with child, devised his estate to the child his wife was enceinte of: & if such child died under age, then he devised it over. The woman was not with child. The question was, "whether the devisee over should take." The Roman tribunals, at once, & the English, at last, finally determined, that the intent, though not expressed, must be construed to give the estate to the substitute, unless a posthumous child lived to be of age to dispose of it. 10189. —— ——.]—Testator gave the produce of his real estate to his daughter E. for life, so long as she should remain single; but in case she should marry, then he gave one-half of the income to his daughter E., & one-half to his daughter M., a married woman with children; & after the death of M. he gave one-half of the trust moneys to her children & the other half to the children of E.; & if M. should die without leaving children, then the whole for E.'s children; & if E. should die without children, the whole to M.'s children; & if both should die without children, then over. 10191. ——.]—A gift over, though in terms contingent on the marriage of the donee of the preceding estate, will take effect on the determination of that estate by death, notwithstanding that the donee of the preceding estate takes an interest under the gift over.

Testator, by will made in 1852, gave his real & personal estate to A. on trust to pay the rents & interest to his wife for the support of herself & his children, till the eldest should attain twenty-five, or until his wife should marry again, & in case of his wife marrying again before any child attained twenty-five to pay her £30 a year thereout, & apply the residue for the support of his children, & as his two children should attain twenty-five, upon trust to pay them £700 each, & subject thereto, to pay the rents & interest to his wife for life, in case she should then be unmarried, but in case his wife should marry again, upon trust to pay her £30 a year thereout, & he directed that "then" his trustee should pay the residue of his real & personal estate amongst his "children & their issue & their heirs & assigns, share & share alike as tenants in common"; & in case his children should die under twenty-five without leaving issue then he directed his trustee to pay the rents & interest to his wife for life, & after her death to hold the corpus, as to one moiety, as his wife should by deed or will appoint, as to the other moiety, to the use of A. if living, or if dead, to the use of his children:—Held: the gift of the residue to testator's children & their issue was not contingent on the wife's second marriage, but took effect on her death.—UNDERHILL v. RODEN (1876), 2 Ch. 10192. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed to his daughter M., so long as she should remain single, £120 a year, & directed that on the day of her marriage the principal should be divided amongst his children, the shares of his daughter M. & of another daughter being given to trustees upon trust for the daughters for life, with certain remainders. The question was, whether the gift over on M.'s marriage took effect on her death:—Held: the balance of authority being now strongly against Pile v. Salter, No. 10185, ante, the ordinary rule prevailed, &, although the gift over on marriage included a life tenancy in one-third of the original sum, it took effect on death.—SCARBOROUGH v. SCARBOROUGH (1888), 58 L. T. 851.

10193. —— ——.]—Testator gave to trustees all his real & personal estate, upon trust to suffer his widow to receive the rents & dividends for her life, provided she kept his property in repair & insured the same against loss or damage by fire, & provided further that she remained a widow & did not cohabit with any other man; & in case she made default in repairing or insuring his said property, or married again, or cohabited with any other man, then, in either of the said cases, upon certain trusts in favour of his children or their issue. The widow died without having committed any of the acts or defaults on which her life estate was determinable:—Held: the gift over took effect on the determination of the prior estate by death as well as on the other events.—Re CANE, RUFF v. SIVERS (1890), 60 L. 10195. —— ——.]—A devise or bequest over, in terms made dependent upon the marriage of the donee of the preceding estate, is to be extended, by implication, so as to take effect on the determination of that estate by the death of such donee.

Testator by his will gave all his property to his wife "during her widowhood," & after her death directed that the property should belong & be made over to the child or children "issue of our marriage"; should, however, the widow remarry, "then the whole of my property shall at once be made over legally to the offspring of our marriage,

& if they are minors the whole to be under trusteeship"; also, should the issue of the marriage "die out," then on the remarriage of the widow testator directed that the property should be made over to "the legal next of kin & heirs descendants of my family." No appointment of exor. or trustee was made in the will. The widow, who did not marry again, took out letters of administration in 1883 with the will annexed, &, having intermeddled in the estate, died in Nov. 1915, leaving a will & appointing extrices., who duly proved the same, & in Mar. 1916, as such legal personal representatives, obtained a grant of letters of administration to the estate of testator's only child, who died in 1887, aged eleven years. Upon a suit in the Probate Div. for letters of administration de bonis non with the will of testator, D., annexed:—Held: the child of testator did not take a vested interest, but only an interest contingent upon his surviving the remarriage or death of his mother, testator's widow.—In the Estate of GRIFFITHS, MORGAN v. STEPHENS, [1917] P. 59; 86 L. J. P. 42; 116 L. T. 382.

10196. —— —— In lifetime of testator.]—(1) A Chinese testator by his will directed that the income of the trust fund thereby constituted should be divided equally between his wife & his three sons, but that if she remarried her one-fourth share should be divided equally among the three sons; &, by clause 17, that upon the expiration of twelve years from his death the corpus should be divided equally between the wife & the three sons, with the same gift over in the event of her remarrying within that period. The will contained no disposition of the wife's share in the event of her death, which occurred before testator died:—Held: there could not be implied a gift over to the sons upon the wife's death, since there was nothing in the will to show that that was testator's intention; on the contrary, the presumed intention upon which in other cases a similar implication had been made, namely that the gift was to be limited by the lifetime of the donee, was excluded by clause 17.

(2) The will being in the English language, & employing English terms of legal art, any consideration of Chinese usages not supported by its express terms was excluded.—CHIA KHWEE ENG v. CHIA POH CHOON, [1923] A. C. 424; 92 L. J. P. C. 70; 128 L. T. 556, P. C.

10197. —— Gift over on marriage without consent—Marriage with consent.]—Testator devised certain real estates to trustees & their heirs, upon trust that his daughter M. should, until she should attain the age of twenty-one, if sole & unmarried, receive out of the rents & profits an annuity of £60, & she should thereafter & until she attained thirty-one, if sole & unmarried, receive an annuity of £40; but in case his said daughter should marry without the consent of his trustees, then she should be paid only an annuity of £50, for her sole use, & that the estates should immediately upon the marriage be in trust for the children of his daughter M., as tenants in common in tail; & for default of such issue, in trust for his, testator's, sister S. & her heirs for ever; provided always, that in case his said daughter M. should marry with the consent of the trustees, it should be lawful for them to settle the estates upon M. & her husband for their joint lives & the life of the survivor, with remainder to the issue of the body of his said daughter, in such shares & proportions as the trustees should appoint, & in default of such appointment, in such shares & proportions as were thereinbefore limited. M. married with the consent of the trustees, upon which occasion a settlement was made pursuant to the will, & died without issue:—Held: the remainder to S. was conditional, depending on M.'s marriage without consent; & M. having married with consent, the remainder to S. failed, although M died without issue.—TOLDERVY v. COLT (1836), 1 M. & W. 250; 1 Y. & C. 10198. Attainment of specified age.] — One devises lands to trustees & their heirs in trust to receive the rents, until his son shall come to twenty-one, & to pay one-third thereof to testator's wife in lieu of dower, & out of the other two-thirds to raise portions for his daughters; & devises all to his son W., when twenty-one in tail remainder to A., B. & C. The son died without issue, B. performed the condition, & died without issue, & upon a question, whether D. should have the estate after the death of B. it was certified by the judges of K. B. that D. took no estate on the death of B. but that it went to the heir-at-law of A.—AMHERST v. LYTTON (1729), 5 Bro. Parl. Cas. 254; Mos. 131, 211; Fitz-G. 99; 2 E. R. 661, H. L.

10204. & no issue of other children—Issue of other children living.]—Devise of real estate in trust to pay the clear rents, issues & profits, & in certain proportions, to certain persons in the will mentioned, for life; & then testator proceeds to devise as follows—"& from & after the death of the survivor of them the said L. S." etc., (naming the several persons to whom the above life interests were given) "then I give & devise all & singular the manor, messuages, lands, etc., unto all & every the children of my late sister E. C. by her three several husbands" (naming them), "that shall be then living, & their heirs & assigns for ever, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, & not as joint tenants; & if there should be but one such child, & no issue of any of the other children then living, then, & in that case, I give & devise all my real estates in Ireland unto such surviving child, his or her heirs & assigns for ever." The event which happened was that, at the death of the surviving annuitant, there was only one child of the sister E. 10206. Event of sons being "settled"—Death under twenty-one.]—Testatrix directed the interest of her residuary estate to be applied in defraying the expenses of the education of her nephews G. & C. & principal to be applied either in binding them apprentices at the age of fourteen, or to be reserved till they attained twenty-one, to commence business. "In the event of G. & C. both or either of them, being settled before this will comes in force, I provide that the next boy, J. or H. have the benefit, & so on." G. & C. survived testatrix, but died under twenty-one:—Held: J. & H. were entitled to the residue.—PRESTWIDGE v. GROOMBRIDGE (1833), 6 Sim. 171; 58 E. R. 558.

10207. Gift on cessation of office held by donee—Gift to donee & wife or survivor—Death of donee before ceasing to hold office.]—Testatrix gave to J. & his wife, & the survivor of them, an annuity of £100 during their respective lives, in case J. should become incapable to collect or be discharged from collecting the rents of a particular estate; the annuity to commence & become payable from the first quarter day after her decease, or after he should cease to collect the rents. The husband survived testatrix, but died soon afterwards, having continued to receive the rents till his death. The wife is entitled to the annuity of £100 for her life.—BRITTAIN v. FLEMING (1833), 2 My. & K. 147; 39 E. R. 900.

10208. "Not marrying or dying"—Equivalent to death unmarried.]—Testator gave a sum of money to trustees, in trust only & for the use & benefit of his adopted daughter, & which he desired might be paid to her, & to be settled on her during her life, in case of her marriage: or, in case she did not marry, then the interest of the money, being vested in Government Securities, to be paid to her; &, in the event of her not marrying or dying, then the money to go to his nephews. The daughter married, &, shortly afterwards, died without issue:—Held: her husband, who had taken out administration to her, & not testator's nephews, was entitled to the fund.

10209. Marriage or death of widow—After death of son without issue—Son dying without issue after death of widow.]—Testator devised one moiety of the proceeds of his real estate to his son for his life, & the other moiety to his, testator's, wife, during her widowhood; & directed that in case of the wife's death or marriage in the lifetime of the son, her moiety should go to the son in the same manner as the first mentioned moiety. Testator then directed, that in case his son should die in the widowhood of his mother, & leave lawful issue, the son's moiety, & after the widow's death or marriage, her moiety should become the property of such issue. Testator then devised as follows:—"But in case of such, my son's, demise in the widowhood of his mother, without leaving lawful issue, then I wish & direct the whole of the proceeds of my property to be paid to her during her widowhood, subject to an annuity of £40 per annum to be paid to Mr. T.; & in case of the marriage or death of my present wife, my son being dead, & leaving no lawful issue, then I give the whole of the proceeds of my estate to J." Testator's son survived the widow & died without issue:—Held: the contingency on which J. was to take the estate was destroyed, & the heir-at-law of testator was entitled.—DICKEN v. CLARKE (1837), 2 Y. & C. 10210. Death without leaving any child—Child failing to attain vested interest.]—Devise & bequest of real & personal estate to trustees for A. for life, & afterwards "to convey & assure" equally between all A.'s children, on their respectively attaining twenty-one, with a gift over on A.'s death without "leaving any child." There was one child who survived A., & died an infant:—Held: such child did not take a vested interest & the gift did not take effect.—WALKER v. MOWER (1852), 16 Beav. 365; 51 E. R. 819.

10211. Bankruptcy—Whether gift over takes effect on death—In lifetime of tenant for life.]—Testator gave all his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the proceeds to his wife for life, & after her decease upon trust to sell the property & to stand possessed thereof, as to one-seventh part, in trust, to lay out & invest the same in a government annuity for the life of his son, & upon further trust to pay such annuity when & as the same should become payable, not by anticipation, to his son, for his life, for his own use; but testator declare that in case his son should, either before or after his, testator's, death, become bkpt. or insolvent, or should do any act to incumber the annuity, then the property was to go over to other persons. Testator's son survived testator & died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, without having become bkpt. or insolvent, & without having done any act to incumber the annuity:—Held: his personal representatives were entitled to the property.—DAY v. DAY (1853), 1 Drew. 569; 1 Eq. C. & D., provided D. should be of sound mind at the time of the decease of his wife. But in case he should be insane at that period, then he directed that such sums of stock should be divisible between his sons A., B., & C. D. died insane in the lifetime of testator's wife:—Held: D. did not take any vested interest in such stock, & his share was divisible in thirds, & payable to the three other sons.—Re CHAPPELL'S TRUSTS (1862), 6 L. 10224. ——.]—A testator, being seised of certain lands in fee, devised the same to his wife till his son J. should attain the age of twenty-five years ; & in case he should attain that age, & he, testator, should have other children living at the time of his death, he devised lands to trustees for the term of one thousand years ; & after the expiration or sooner determination of that term, to his son J., for life ; & after his decease, to the use of the first son of the body of his son J., in tail, male, remainder in tail male to the second, third, & other sons of his son J., remainder to his daughters in tail, with remainders over. The will then stated that the term was limited for the purpose of raising £5,000 as portions for other children than the eldest that he might leave at his death ; & that, if all his children except the eldest should die before the ages of twenty-five & twenty-one years, the sum of £5,000 should not be raised, but should cease for the benefit of the person next in reversion for remainder expectant on the said term of one thousand years. Provided that, in case testator should have no such younger child or children, or they should die before the age of twenty-five or twenty-one years, the term of one thousand years should cease, determine, & be utterly void to all intents & purposes. Testator died, leaving his eldest & only son, J., him surviving, who attained the age of twenty-five years after his father's death, & died in 1830, leaving one son only, the present pltf. The question being, whether, under this will, pltf. became entitled to the lands as tenant in tail :—Held : the whole of the devise was not contingent on the event of testator leaving another child besides his son J. ; but the contingency was only meant to apply to such subsequent trusts & limitations as depended for their existence upon the happening of the event in question, & therefore pltf. took the lands as tenant in tail.—QUICKE v. LEACH (1844), 13 M. & W. 218 ; 13 L. 10226. ——.]—M. devised certain estates to his nephew, Sir J. E., Bart., for life, & after Sir J. E.'s decease to his second son & his heirs male ; & in default to the third son & his heirs male, & so on, with a proviso, that if the baronetcy should come to or descend to the second son of Sir J. E., the estates should go over to the next in succession. P. the father of Lady E., by a will made subsequently to that of M., devised his estates to his daughter, Lady E., for life, then to her eldest son for life, & his heirs, & for default, etc., to the second son of Lady E. for life, & to his heirs, " in case he shall not become, or shall not continue, seised of the real estates of M. by virtue of his will," & to the third & every other son of Lady E., subject to the like condition, " provided always, that if it shall happen that my said daughter shall have no issue male of her body living at her death, or no such issue male as shall be entitled, by the true meaning of this my will to my real estates, hereby limited & settled as aforesaid, then, & in either of those cases, I devise all my said real estates, subject respectively as aforesaid, to all the daughters, if more than one, of the body of my said daughter, who shall be living at her death, as tenants in common, & their heirs, etc.," with cross remainders amongst them; " & if there should be but one such daughter living at my said daughter's decease, & no issue of any other such daughter then in being, then to such only surviving daughter & her heirs." At the time of the death of Lady E. there were two sons & several daughters living; both sons afterwards died without issue:—Held: the daughters of Lady E. did not take any estate under the limitations of the will of P. for that the words " living at her death " applied to both branches of the proviso, & the contingency on which the daughters were to become entitled determined at the death of their mother.—EDEN v. WILSON (1852), 4 H. 10227. ——.]—The general rule on this subject with respect to wills appears to me to be correctly stated in the passage in 1 Jarman on Wills, pp. 752, 753, to which we were referred in the course of the first argument. " When a contingent particular estate is followed by other limitations, a question frequently arises, whether the contingency affects such estate only, or extends to the whole series. The rule in these cases seems to be, that if the ulterior limitations be immediately consecutive on the particular contingent estate in unbroken continuity, & no intention or purpose is expressed with reference to that estate, in contradistinction to the others, the whole will be considered to hinge on the same contingency; & that, too, although the contingency relate personally to the object of the particular estate, & therefore appear not reasonably applied to the ulterior limitations. Thus, where an estate for life is made to depend on the contingency of the object of it being alive at the period when the preceding estates determine, limitations consecutive on that estate have been held to be contingent on the same event, for want of something in the will to authorise a distinction between them " (CROMPTON, J.).—DOE d. At his death, half of the interest she gave to a daughter of the brother till she attained twenty-one, & " then to receive half the capital." Likewise testatrix bequeathed to a son of her brother the other half:—Held: on the construction of the whole will, the bequests to the niece & nephew were not contingent upon the sisters' deaths in testatrix's lifetime.—BOOSEY v. GARDENER (1854), 5 De G. There was then a proviso that if either daughter should die in the lifetime of the other unmarried & without issue, the interest of an additional sum of £2,000 should be paid to the survivor for life, &, subject to the sums aforesaid, in trust to pay £500 to J., & £500 to E. J. & E. both died in the lifetime of the two daughters, one of whom then also died unmarried, leaving all her property to her sister, who was still unmarried also. On the question what interest the surviving daughter took, & whether the legacies of £500 & £500 to J. & E. were vested or contingent:—Held: the surviving daughter took one moiety of the income of the residues only, & the legacies of £500 & £500 were vested legacies.—HILL v. HILL (1860), 2 L. This was followed by a gift of the produce of the estate to his nephews, which commenced with the word " likewise ":—Held: upon the context, the gift to the nephews was governed by the same contingency as that to the widow, & the son having attained twenty-one, the gift to the nephews failed.—PAYLOR v. PEGG (1857), 24 Beav. 105; 53 E. SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

10234. Meaning of survive—Depends on context.]—The rule, as settled by modern authorities, is that the word " survivor " is to be construed strictly, & is not to be read " other," unless the rest of the will should render the more liberal & less literal construction essential, for the purpose of carrying into execution the objects expressed by the will.

Testator gave one-third of his real & personal estate to each of his three daughters for life, &

PART XVI. SECT. 27, SUB-SECT. 1.

10238 i. Meaning of survive—Living at particular time.]—The word "surviving" when used in a will, is to be read in its ordinary & natural sense of "then remaining living," unless there is something in the will to indicate an intention that it is to be read in any other sense.—Re WILSON (1900), 19 N. Z. L. R. 406.—N.Z.

10243 i. —— Outliving particular person.]—Testator, by his will left the residue of his property to trustees upon trust to divide it equally between such of the children of A. & of B., "as shall survive me & live to attain 21, on their attaining such age" :—Held : the primary meaning of "survive" is "outlive" ; there was nothing in the context of the will to control that meaning, &, therefore, the children born during testator's lifetime, & who were living at his death, were alone entitled to share in the residue.—KNIGHT v. KNIGHT (1912), 14 C. L. R. 86.—AUS.

income to D., if living, from the expiration of such period until he should attain twenty-five or die, whichever should first happen, &, subject as aforesaid, testator directed that the moiety should be held in trust "for such only surviving son, or, if more than one surviving son, for the eldest of such surviving sons absolutely." But, in case D. should leave no son him surviving, the property was to be held in trust for R. absolutely. B. was a stranger in blood to testator; D. was testator's nephew. D. attained twenty-five:—Held: having regard to the whole scheme of the will, an absolute gift of the second moiety to D. at twenty-five must be implied.

(2) Again, there is the word "surviving" & in construing that word one naturally looks for the happening of some event in the first instance, most probably a death, though it may be something else, to which the word may apply. The word "surviving" may be used as meaning either surviving a particular person, or surviving a particular period of time. It may point to a person surviving a time at which he or some one else attained twenty-one. The word "surviving" does not seem to me so strong a word as "such" (NORTH, J.).—MELLOR v. DAINTREE (1886), 33 Ch. D. 198; 56 L. J. Ch. 33; 55 L. T. 175.

10246. —— Living beyond particular period.]—Testator devised to each of his children an estate for the life of that child, with remainder to the children of that child, & in case any or either of testator's children should die without leaving any child or children him, her, or them surviving, then the testator devised the estates to which their child or children respectively would have been entitled under his will, if living, to his, testator's, surviving children for their respective natural lives, & after their deceases respectively he gave their respective shares to their respective children, their heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns. There was no gift over on the death of all testator's children without leaving children. C., one of testator's children, died without leaving issue. Some of the other children were then living; others had died leaving children of theirs then living:—Held: (1) the word "surviving" was to be read in its proper sense, & the children of those children of testator who had predeceased C., took no interest in the estate of which C. was tenant for life; the fact that the original shares are all settled by the will, & that the shares which the "survivors" take in the share of a child who dies without issue, are settled in the same way as their original shares, is not by itself sufficient to show that "survivors" is used otherwise than in its proper sense.

(2) "Surviving" means living beyond some period. Now the true rule for construing a will is, that if a rule has been laid down fixing in the absence of any expressed intention the meaning of a word, then that meaning is to be given to it unless there is something in the context to vary the meaning, & if no such definite rule has been laid down, then the words are to be taken in their natural sense. There is no canon as to the period to which survivorship is to be referred, except that in an immediate gift it is to be referred to the death of testator, & if there is a life estate then to the determination of the life estate. Here the natural meaning of "surviving" is living at the death of the child, the estate devised to whom for life is given over on his death. It is said that the intention of testator is shown to be that the clause should be construed otherwise. If such an intention is sufficiently indicated effect ought to be given to it. But, in my opinion, to read "surviving" as meaning "others" would defeat the intention, for the clause of accruer is to take effect only in the event of a child dying without leaving any child him surviving. The word "surviving" must there be read in its natural sense, & to give it another sense in the same clause would be a forced construction (COTTON, L.J.).—Re BENN, BENN v. BENN (1885), 29 Ch. (2) The word "survivor" is an expression frequently to be met with in wills, & ought in effect to be read as meaning the one last interested, & to be applied distributively to each fund according to the state of his title.—DREW v. KILLICK (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 266; 10 L. Testator next directed that, if any of his children should predecease him leaving issue, such issue should receive the capital which would have been liferented by their parent, & that, if any of his children should predecease him leaving no issue, their shares should be divided equally among his surviving children & the issue of predeceasing children per stirpes. Then followed a direction that, failing any survivor of his son & daughters or issue of any of them, his trustees should pay over the shares of his son & daughters to their nearest heirs & representatives in mov-

A great deal has been said as to the authorities on such a point, & the principle of them is said to be, that if there be a gift to a class of persons, or to the survivors or survivor of them, the survivorship must primâ facie be construed as applying to the period of distribution. Thus, if there be a gift to the children of A., or the survivors or survivor of them, & such a gift follow a gift of a life estate, the period at which the survivorship is to be ascertained must be taken to be that of the death of the tenant for life. Whether this is a good rule or not I do not stop to inquire, & it is often better to adhere to a rule than to dispute about the propriety of it. I may, however, observe, that where is a gift to a parent for life, & after his death to his children, or the survivors or survivor of them the intention of testator is probably disappointed in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred by such a rule, for testator would rarely intend that the accident of a child dying in the parent's lifetime should deprive the child of his share altogether. I agree, however, that, primâ facie, such is the rule of construction. But it is only a rule to be followed where there is nothing to show an intention to the contrary (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—BLACKMORE v. SNEE (1857), 1 De G. & J. 455; 44 E. R. 799, L. C.

He then directed their maintenance with the dividends until the youngest should attain thirty; then upon trust for them respectively, & the survivors & survivor of them in equal shares, with power to the trustees to make such distribution sooner, if they think fit, provided the youngest child should have attained twenty-one:—Held: the period of division was the death of the husband, or the short period limited after his death; the clause of maintenance till thirty, & postponing payment till then, did not disturb the previous vesting in the children surviving at the death of the husband, so as to introduce remoteness, & one child having died living the father, her share went over to those who should be surviving at his death.—HODSON v. MICKLETHWAITE

10274. —— —— Application to real estate.]—(1) The word "survivor" in gifts of personal estate may be taken as referring to the period of distribution. It is not equally settled that with regard to real estate it applies to the determination of the prior limitation.

(2) When the word "survivor" is applied to a class of persons, & individuals of that class are named, its natural meaning is "the longest liver" of those who are named.

The natural & obvious meaning of the word "survivor" is not the person who shall survive or outlive a particular event, but, when it is applied to a class of persons, & individuals of that class are named, the natural & obvious meaning of the word is the longest liver of those who are named; &, therefore, in this particular case, as in other cases, the word "survivor" should, I think, be regarded not as referring to any particular event previously mentioned, but as referring to that which, as I have already observed, is the natural meaning of the word, namely, that individual person who, out of the individuals named, shall turn out to be the longest liver (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

(3) Whether cross remainders are to be implied or not is a question of construction; & wherever there are limitations in tail male "& in default of such issue" a gift over, the presumption is, that that means in default of all such issue male.—TAAFFE v. CONMEE (1862), 10 H. 10276. Benefit of survivorship given to particular individual or individuals—Gift over in event of not surviving.]—J., referring to the fact that he possessed certain stock requested payment to his brother of a net annual annuity, the residue to his sister, also the net interest of other stock to E. J.; each of the above three annuities to be enjoyed for their lives, with benefit of survivorship, & at the dissolution of those three persons over absolutely. Testator then directed an accumulation to make up £100 to pay the following annuities: To E. O. £20 per annum, to C. T. £20 per annum, to M. E. £20 per annum, to T. T. £20 per annum; the benefit of survivorship in these four annuities to devolve to E. O.; but in case of her not surviving, the benefit of survivorship to be derived by the three first-named legatees; & on the demise of all the annuitants, over as before. E. O. survived T. T. & died, & on the question whether her representatives were entitled to the two annuities to her & T. T.:—Held: they were not, & the annuities, being undisposed of, went to the next of kin.—JERNEGAN v. BAXTER (1854), 2 W. R. 481.

10277. —— Reference to named persons.]—Testator gave £2,000 in remainder to his sisters, except A., & he then gave a legacy to A. He afterwards gave "to each of his sisters, namely B., C., & D., £500" each, "& in case of death of either, their portion to go to the surviving sisters above mentioned:—Held: A. was not included among the surviving sisters.—WHITE v. WAKLEY (1858), 26 Beav. 23; 28 L. T. 287.

10293. ——.]—(1) Testator, by will, made in 1841, gave the residue of his estate & effects, subject to a life interest vested in his wife, to his six grand nephews & nieces equally, share & share alike, & to their respective heirs or assigns " declaring that if any of his residuary legatees shall die without leaving lawful issue before his or her share vest in the party or parties so deceasing, the same shall belong to & be divided equally, share & share alike, among the survivors of his grandnephews & grandnieces equally " :—Held : the word " vest " did not alter the general rule, but " survivors " meant the survivors at the death of the tenant for life.

(2) It is a settled rule of construction that words of survivorship in a will should be referred to the period appointed by that will for the payment or distribution of the subject-matter of the gift.

(3) If testator gives a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, to be paid or distributed among a number of persons, & refers to the contingency of any one or more of them dying, & then gives the estate or the money to the survivor, the period of distribution is the period of the death of testator : & accordingly the event of the death upon which that contingency is to take place is referable to the interval of time between the date of the will & the death of testator, & the words are construed to provide for the event of the death of any one of the legatees during the lifetime of testator. But where testator gives a life estate in a sum of money, or the residue of his estate, & at the expiration of that life estate directs the money to be paid or the residue to be divided among a number of objects, & then refers to the possibility of some one or more of those persons dying, without specifying the time, & directs, in that event, the payment to be made or the distribution to be made among the survivors, it is understood & regarded by the law that he means the contingency to extend over the whole period of time that must

The children of the brother claimed that the whole of the residue had vested in them a morte testatoris, while the remaining heirs ab intestato of testator maintained that the sisters' shares had fallen into intestacy:—Held: testator had not made separate bequests of one-fourth shares of the residue of his estate, but had left the residue in equal shares to such of the beneficiaries as might be alive at the date of his death; &, as the family of his brother were the sole survivors at that date, they were entitled to the whole residue.—YOUNG'S TRUSTEES v. YOUNG, [1927] S. 10296. Construction causing repugnancy—Survivorship in case of death without issue.]—Bequest to the children of A. who should be living at testator's decease, equally; with survivorship in case of death without leaving issue: if, leaving issue, the issue to have the parent's share. The survivorship cannot be restrained to the period of testator's death: as upon that construction the clause would be repugnant.—SHERGOLD v. BOONE (1807), 13 Ves. 370; 33 E. R. 332.

10297. Express gift to survivor—Death of all in lifetime of testator.]—Testator gave his leasehold & residuary estate upon trust as to the clear annual residue to divide same between his three daughters for their separate use; & in case any or either of his daughters should die leaving lawful issue surviving, to pay such share or shares to the children of such one or more of them. He also directed that, in case there should be only one of his daughters surviving during the continuance of the trusts, the whole of his estate & effects should be paid to that surviving daughter. What happened was, that all three daughters were married & died without ever having had children. The representatives of the survivor claimed the whole of the estate; but the representatives of one of the sisters who had died previously contended that there was an intestacy:—Held: upon the language of the whole will, the representatives of the survivor were entitled to the estate under the latter bequest.—PULBROOK v. BRATT (1859), 33 L. But, in case A. should die without issue, then to pay & distribute same equally amongst all & every the children of B. & C. & the survivors of them; but, in case any of such children should be then dead, leaving issue of his, her or their body or bodies lawfully begotten, then such issue to have as well such original share or shares as the father or mother of such issue so dying would have been entitled to if then living, as also such other share or shares thereof as the father or mother of such issue so dying might have been entitled to by survivorship or otherwise. A. survived testator, & died without issue :—Held : the period of the survivorship of the children of B. & C. is not to be referred to the time of the death of testator, but to that of the death of A., being the period of distribution; & the children of B. & C. living at the date of the will, & those born after that date & before the death of A., were entitled to the real & personal estate, with survivorship between them in case of the death of any of such children without issue before the death of A., the children of such of the children as died before A., leaving issue, being substituted for the original legatees.—BUCKLE v. FAWCETT (1845), 4 Hare, 536; 5 L. There was a gift over to other parties, in case there should be no child living at the death of the sister, such parties to take in the same manner "as is hereinbefore directed, had any or either of the children of my sister survived so as to have become entitled thereto." There were three children, one of whom only survived the sister:—Held: such child took the whole fund.—DANIEL v. GOSSET (1854), 19 Beav. 478; 52 E. R. 436.

10323. ——.]—G. F. bequeathed his personal estate upon trusts for the benefit of his wife for life, & at her death upon trust to transfer same unto his three sons G. W. & S. or to the survivors of them, if they, or the survivors, of them, should all have attained the age of twenty-one; but in case they should not have attained that age, upon trust to pay the rents, etc., for the maintenance, etc. of his sons until they should have attained that age, & then upon trust to convey the trust estate to his sons, or the survivors of them as aforesaid; but in case neither of his sons should survive his wife, then upon trust to dispose of the trust estate as his wife should appoint. G. F., died in 1818 leaving his wife & his three sons surviving. Each of the sons attained twenty-one but G. alone survived his mother:—Held: G. F. did not intend that any son dying in the lifetime of the widow should have a vested interest.—FISHER v. MOORE (1855), 1 Jur. N. S. 1011; 3 W. R. 584.

10326. ——.]—Gift of residue in trust for testator's wife during widowhood, & on her death or marriage, to pay it amongst his five children, or the "survivor or survivors" of them, at such ages as his wife should appoint, or in default at twenty-one. But in case of the death of any, before his share should become "payable," leaving issue, then to pay his share to such issue. A child attained twenty-one, & died in the life of the wife, leaving issue. No appointment having been made, held that the survivorship had reference to the cesser of the wife's estate, & that the issue, & not the representatives of the child, took the share.—HIND v. SELBY (1856), 22 Beav. 373; 52 E. R. 1151.

10327. ——.]—Testator bequeathed a fund in trust for his sister A. for life, & after her death to be divided between the children of his sisters B., C. & D. who should survive testator, such children taking per stirpes "with benefit of survivorship among members of the same family":—Held: (1) the latter words of themselves meant survivorship at the death of the tenant for life, & could not be otherwise interpreted by comparison with other bequests in the same will, showing an intention that those bequests should not go over if the legatee had children; (2) the survivorship applied to accrued shares.—Re CRAWHALL'S TRUST (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 480; 27 L. T. O. S. 278; 2 Jur. N. S. 892; 44 E. R. 475, L. JJ.

10328. ——.]—Bequest to persons for life, & after their deaths, "unto their & each of their issue, & the survivor or the survivors of them, on their severally attaining twenty-one, in equal proportions. On the death of the last tenant for life, there were three generations of issue living:—Held: all who survived & attained twenty-one participated in the fund.—MADDOCK v. LEGG (1858), 25 Beav. 531; 53 E. R. 740.

10329. ——.]—Gift to A. for life, & afterwards to seven named persons, equally, "the share of each who shall happen to die to be equally divided amongst the survivors unless M., one of them, should die leaving children, in that case, I mean that her children should inherit the share of the parent." The seven all died before the tenant for life, M. being the survivor of them:—Held: the seven took equally, the children of M. took no more than one-seventh, & the share of one of the seven who predeceased testatrix was undisposed of.

The only duty of the ct. is to determine to what period the word survivor or survivorship relates; & one cannot get over the difficulty by giving it amongst them as joint tenants. The question really is, to what period the survivorship points, & I think that it is now settled, that the survivorship must be referable to the time of distribution (ROMILLY, M.R.).—CAMBRIDGE v. ROUS (1858), 25 Beav. 409; 53 E. brother R. W., £3,000 in trust to his surviving child or children; failing issue, I leave the £3,000 to my brother W. W., in trust to his surviving child or children; failing such issue, I leave the £3,000 to my brother D. O. W., in trust to his surviving child or children; failing issue, I leave the said £3,000 to the children of my brother J. W." Similar legacies of £3,000 each were given to the brothers R. & D., with the same phraseology as to "failing of issue, etc." :—Held: the word "surviving" in the bequest meant surviving at the deaths of the respective fathers, & the brothers of testator took life interests in these legacies.—BLOUNT v. WHEBLE (1869), 21 L. All the children survived testator & attained the age of twenty-one years, & three of them died in the lifetime of the tenant for life :—Held: the representatives of the deceased children were not entitled to share in the fund, but it was divisible among such only of the children as survived the tenant for life.—WELLOCK v. OSTLE (1872), 27 L. He then directed that if any of his children should die before his, her, or their share or shares should become transferable & payable, without leaving issue, then the share or shares of the child or children so dying should go over to the survivors; but in case any of his children should die before his, her or their share or shares should become payable, leaving issue, then the trustees were directed to transfer & pay the share or shares of such deceased child or children unto his, her, or their issue, share & share alike, when they should attain twenty-one :—Held: the substitutionary gift to the issue of deceased children, was sufficient to divest the share of a child who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of testator's widow, the tenant for life.—CHELL v. CHELL (1875), 23 W. Testator died seised of real estate; after testator's death W. A. died then M. A., & J. S. last of all :—Held: upon the true construction of the will the word "survivor" in the ultimate gift meant the survivor of M. A. & W. A. living at the death of J. S. the tenant for life; since M. A., though she survived W. A., had predeceased J. S., she had not come within the terms of this ultimate gift, & upon the death of J. The last clause in the will provided as follows: "I direct that in case of the death of one of more of my children that their equal share or shares are to be equally divided between the survivors." The eight named children survived testator, but one of them died in the widow's lifetime leaving children :—Held: in as much as the original gift to testator's children was a gift to a class to be ascertained at testator's death, the final direction must apply to the death of a member of that class during the lifetime of the widow, otherwise it would be meaningless; & only those children who survived the widow were entitled to share in testator's estate.

The general rule as laid down . . . is that where there is a gift to A. for life with remainder to A. 10355. Contrary intention of testator.]—Under a bequest over after an interest for life by words importing both a joint interest & a tenancy in common, as to three " or the survivor share & share " alike " the period, to which the survivorship relates, depends, not on any technical words, but on the apparent intention, collected from the particular disposition or the general context.—NEWTON v. AYSCOUGH (1815), 19 Ves. 534 ; 34 E. 10356. ——.]—Devise " to A. for life, & from & after her decease to the surviving children of B. & C." The only child of B. died during the life of A. :—Held : the period of survivorship referred to the death of testator, & the heir-at-law of deceased child of B. was entitled to share with the children of C. who survived A.

Generally speaking, the rule of construction in such cases is clear, that all the children who are in esse at the period of testator's death, then take a vested interest, which is transmissible to their respective heirs immediately. Where there is a limitation by remainder to children, who shall be in esse at the happening of a contingent event, there the remainder is contingent, & no interest vests until the event happens. If the demise had been to the children generally, without adding the word " surviving " there would have been no doubt that this case would have ranged within the first class of cases, & that the estate would have vested in the children from the moment of testator's death. The law always inclines so to construe a devise as to make the estate vest ; & the probable intention of testator in this, as in other cases, was to render the limitation to the children certain & secure. If upon the face of the will a contrary intention is apparent, that intention must be effectuated ; where no such intention is apparent, the cts. have always acted upon the probable intention of testator, & the general inclination of the law to make the estate vest. . . . Upon general principles, there seems to be no good reason why the vesting of the estate should be postponed beyond the period of testator's death ; & there is a very good reason against so postponing it, namely, the danger of producing a lapsed devise. Here the testator's death was the period at which he himself in all probability intended the devise to the children to take effect ; & the estate did vest at the period of testator's death in such of the children as were then living (BAYLEY, J.).—DOE d. 10357. —— As many objects of gifts as possible to be included.]—In construing limitations to a parent for life, & afterwards to his children, with a provision relating to survivorship annexed, whether occurring in wills or settlements, the rule for determining both the class who are to take & the contingency to which the survivorship refers is to lean to that construction which will include as many objects of the gift as possible, consistently with the declared purpose of the author of the instrument.

Testatrix gave an annuity of £300 to her daughter, together with the interest of all she had in the stocks ; & at her death she gave the stock to her children, to be equally divided between them, together with the interest, to be laid out for their use, in case their mother died before they arrived at the age of twenty-one. In case one died, the others were to have share & share alike ; the survivor to have the whole ; & if they all died before twenty-one, then she gave the stock to her five nieces. Death of life tenant in lifetime of testator.]—Testatrix bequeathed her property to her mother for life, & at her decease gave a legacy of £200 to A., directing that then the residue should be equally divided between her surviving brothers & sisters:—Held: the word "surviving" referred to the period of distribution; & the mother having died before testatrix, the brothers & sisters living at the death of testatrix were entitled to the benefit of the gift; & there was, in the events which happened, no bequest to the brothers & sisters who died before testatrix.—SPURRELL v. SPURRELL (1853), 11 Hare, 54; 1 Eq. 10370. Gift over on failure of issue.]—A. by will directed the proceeds of his real & personal estate to be divided between & amongst his four children by name, "but if any one or more of his said children should die before his or her share should become payable, leaving no lawful issue, then such share or shares should devolve & go to his surviving child or children":—Held: (1) the time when the survivorship took effect was to be the death of the particular legatee, & (2) an accruing share went over in the same manner as an original one.—WILMOT v. FLEWITT (1865), 13 L. 10371. Capricious provision in will—Selection of donees in discretion of trustees.]—To make the operative part of his settlement, the selection of the persons who were to succeed to the corpus of his estate dependent in a great measure upon the option of his trustees, was certainly an unusual if not a capricious provision; & that is one of the considerations which may fairly be taken into account in judging of the time at which testator intended that survivorship should be ascertained. I have difficulty in holding that the provision was so capricious as to affect the application of the rule laid down in Young v. Robertson, No. 10293, ante (LORD WATSON).—BOWMAN v. BOWMAN, [1899] A. i. In General.

10401. General rule — Survivor construed in natural sense.]—Testator, in the early part of his will, gave all his property amongst his four illegitimate children, a boy & three girls, subject to such regulations & legacies as he should thereafter mention. He then says: "As the whole of this estate is to be equally divided amongst the beforementioned four children, or the survivor of them, a regular division must be made of the estate when each comes of age, or is married; & the share of such person is not to be considered any longer as belonging to the public stock, but to the particular person so coming of age, if a boy; when the girls, or any one of them, come of age or get married, I hereby direct, that their shares may be so settled on themselves during their lives, & on their children, in equal proportions, after their deaths; that it will not be in the power of the husband, if so inclined, to injure either his wife or children." Testator then proceeds: "Should it be the will of Almighty God to take one or more of these children unto Himself, the share or shares of such children dying without issue are to be equally divided amongst the survivors; but in case of issue, these children are to inherit the share of their parents amongst them equally; & in case they die without issue, it is to return for the benefit of the survivors of those four children, or their families: upon the reversion of any sum to the public stock, the issue of a deceased child is to have the share which its parent would have had:—Held: the boy, on attaining twenty-one, took an absolute interest in his share; the daughters took for life, with remainder to their issue; on either daughter dying without issue, her share would go to the survivors of the four children, in like manner as their original shares.—JACKSON v. FORBES (1829), Taml. 88; 48 E. R. 30.

10402. ——.]—Testator gave stock to trustees, to be divided, after the death of two persons who had life-interests in it, among A., B., C., D., & E., in equal shares; & he directed, that, if any of them should die without issue, before their respective shares should become payable the share of him, her, or them so dying without issue should go to, & be equally divided among, the survivor & survivors of them. A. died, leaving issue, who were living at the time fixed for the distribution of the fund: then B. died, leaving a son, who died without issue, before the period of distribution; shortly afterwards, & also before the period of distribution, C. died without issue:—Held: (1) the words "survivor & survivors," were to be construed in their natural sense, & not as equivalent to "other & others," so that no part of the shares of B. & C. went over to A.'s personal representative.

(2) The next question relates to the share of Jane Greenwood [C.]. As she survived the son of Mary Powell [B.] she would become entitled to her proportion of Mary Powell's share; & though she died before the time when the shares became payable, & though, therefore, her original share would become divisible among the survivors, yet, on the authority of Re Scaife, Ex p. West, No. 10515, post, & that class of cases, the share which accrued to her would not go over (LORD LYNDHURST, C.).—CROWDER v. STONE (1829), 3 Russ. 217; 7 L. J. O. S. Ch. 93; 38 E. R. 558, L. trustees to pay & divide each of them from & immediately after the decease of his daughters C. & W. unto & equally amongst all & every his grandchildren then living, children of H. & all the children of C. & W., as well those then living as those which might thereafter be born, share & share alike, etc. ; & as to the residue of the moneys to arise from the sale of his real & personal estate, he directed his trustees to pay & divide the same unto & equally amongst the children of H. then living, & the children of C. & W. then living or to be born during his lifetime, share & share alike, as tenants in common. The will then contained a proviso that the legacies or shares should vest in the grandchildren at twenty-three, & that if any should die under twenty-three without issue, then the legacies or shares of them so dying should go & accrue to the survivors, & survivor of them, to be equally divided between them, share & share alike. At testator's death there were twelve children of H., C., & W. Of these, four died under twenty-three ; then six attained that age ; then two died under twenty-three ; & of H.'s children, who were five in number, three attained the age of twenty-three, of whom one, namely J. H., died, after surviving M. H., who died under twenty-three, & predeceasing D. H., who died under that age :—Held : for the purpose of the above construction, the words "survivors & survivor" were to be taken in their usual sense, & to be considered as referring to survivors in each class of grandchildren.—CROMEK v. LUMB (1839), 3 Y. & C. 10412. —— ——.]—The question as to both clauses is, whether the words " survivors or survivor " can be read " others or other " ; & I am bound to say, that the later authorities lean more strongly than the earlier ones to the strict construction of words ; although, in cases where it is necessary to do so in order to render a will intelligible, or where a clear & necessary inference can be drawn from the terms of the will, the ct. will not hesitate to construe the words " survivors or survivor " as " others or other." There are two classes of cases in which this construction has been adopted, one relating especially to realty, where there are limitations to members of a class for life, & then to their issue in tail, & in default of issue of any, then over to the survivors or survivor. In such a case, the words " survivors or survivor " are almost of necessity construed " others or other," on account of the extreme improbability of testator contemplating the members of the original class as likely to be in existence at the time of an indefinite failure of issue of any of them. The other class of cases more nearly resemble the present. They are cases where there is a gift over on the death of one of the original class, for the benefit of the survivors & of their issue. It is certainly a strange intention to impute to testator, to make his bounty to the issue depend on the accident of their parent surviving the person whose share is given over. But such a consideration alone will not justify the ct. in construing the words " survivors or survivor " in any other than their natural sense (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re CORBETT'S TRUSTS (1860), John. 591 ; 29 L. 10425. —— ——.]—A will gave portions in trust for each of testator's children E., L., & T., for their respective lives, & afterwards for their respective children ; provided that if any of his children died without leaving a child entitled to take under the will, the shares of such children should go to their " then surviving " brothers & sisters, if more than one in equal shares, & if only one then to him or her absolutely. E., L., & T. all survived testator, E. died first, leaving children. Then L. died without issue, leaving T. surviving :—Held : upon the true construction of this will the words " then surviving " must receive their ordinary & natural meaning, & the children of E. took no part of L.'s share.

I cannot help saying that the word " survivor " is a word which requires a context. Survivor of whom ? Survivor when ? Those are both categories of thought which must be supplied in order to give the word " survivor " any meaning at all. It may mean the survivor of testator ; it may mean the survivor at the time of some event contemplated by the will which is being discussed ; & what it is must be found out by reference to the context. Now, in this case I wish to give every effect to the context, & when I look to see if there is anything in the context which controls, cuts down or explains otherwise than the words themselves do, what is referred to by those words, I can find nothing that entitled me to go beyond the words themselves in the context in which they stand (LORD HALSBURY, C.).—INDERWICK v. TATCHELL [1903] A. 10426. —— ——.]—Testator gave the income of his estate, real & personal, to trustees upon trust to pay & divide the same equally between & amongst S., the daughter of C., & thirteen other named persons during their respective lives, &, if any of them should die leaving children them surviving, directed the share of income payable to the parent to be divided equally amongst his, her, or their children, & from & after the death of the survivor of the said thirteen other named persons the name of S. being omitted, upon trust to sell the whole of his trust estates & divide the proceeds equally amongst such of the children of the said C. & thirteen other named persons, the name of S. being again omitted, as might be living at the death of the last survivor of them, or, if any of them were dead leaving children them surviving, then amongst their children, such children to take their parent's share equally between them. Two of the thirteen named persons died in testator's lifetime without leaving children :—Held : there was an intestacy as to these two shares of income down to the period of distribution.

The general rule of construction which by implying a joint tenancy or survivorship prevents a partial intestacy on a gift of income to several persons, with a gift over of the corpus on the death of the survivor, is not to be extended to cases where there is an express gift of the parents' share to the children of any of the original life tenants who died before the period of dissolution leaving children. Accordingly there may be in such a case an intestacy as to the income of some shares until the period of sale & distribution.

Let me look at it from the other point of view & see if I can arrive at a satisfactory result by the implication of a gift to the survivors. In this case it appears to me that in order to carry out any intention which I can fairly presume on the part of testator, I should have to imply not an ordinary gift over on the death of any one of the first takers to the others, but I should have to say further that, contingently, on any one of them dying without issue, his or her share was to go, not to the survivors in the ordinary sense of the word, but to the survivors in a modified sense of the word, construing it as including survivorship by stocks. In that case, on the death of one of the first takers without leaving issue after the death of another leaving issue, the issue of the one who had previously died leaving issue would be entitled to a share as representing his parent, his parent being considered to have survived by reason of the survivorship of the stock. I am by no means clear, however, that the word " survivor " could be properly construed in that way, though no doubt an express limitation might be so framed as to produce that effect. But in any case the gift which I am asked to imply appears to me to be different from any other gift by implication which I can find in the books. Moreover, so far as I am aware, the cases in which gifts of this nature have been implied have been confined to cases in which the gift over is on the death of the survivor of all the first takers, while in the present case the gift over is not on the death of the survivor of all the first takers, but on the death of the survivor of thirteen out of the fourteen first takers (PARKER, J.).—Re HOBSON, BARWICK v. HOLT, [1912] 1 Ch. 626 ; 106 L. 10442. ——.]—A. devises portions to his four children, payable at their respective ages of twenty-one years, or marriage; & in case any of them should die before the time of payment, or should die without issue, then his or their share to the survivor or survivors of them. One of them died under age, & without issue; this, though a limitation of a personal estate, is good, but liable to the contingency of survivorship, till it comes to the last of the four children.

In this case the limitation being to the survivors & survivor of them, & his heirs, it could not be intended a dying without issue generally, which would make it void, but a dying without issue in such manner as that the survivors or survivor might take it, which must be during their lives; & consequently good (JEKYLL, M.R.).—NICHOLLS v. SKINNER (1719), Prec. The nephew & sister being testator's co-heirs at law & the former having one daughter & the sister being unmarried for the purpose of destroying the contingent remainders expectant on their life estates by merger of such life estates in the reversionary estate, as co-heirs, by bargain & sale conveyed the premises discharged from all the contingent interest devised by the will to the uses therein declared; that is to say, to such uses as they should jointly appoint; & in default thereof upon such further uses for the benefit of the nephew & sister respectively as were therein mentioned:—Held: (1) the daughter of testator's nephew took, upon the death of testator & under his will, an estate in fee simple in remainder during the lives of the cestui que vies, in the undivided third part of the messuages & lands comprised in the indenture of demise, subject to be divested in part, by the birth of other children of the nephew & sister, or of either of them, & determinable altogether in the event of her dying in the lifetime of the nephew, her father, or under twenty-one, without leaving issue; (2) the conveyance did not pass any estate or interest which could in any way defeat or affect the remainder so vested in the daughter of testator's nephew.—MACHIN v. REYNOLDS (1821), 3 Brod. & Bing. 121; 6 Moore, C. 10458. (2) The construction endeavoured to be put upon it was, to read the word "survivors" as "others" or what amounts to nearly the same thing, to construe the survivorship as having reference to the period of the death of testator. Not only is that contrary to the general current of the authorities on the subject, but it seems to me repugnant to the express meaning of the words which testator employed (ROMILLY, M.R.).—NEVILL v. BODDAM (1860), 28 Beav. 554; 29 L. In case any one or more of his three daughters should die under twenty-one & have no issue, then he directed the share or shares of such one or more so dying to be paid to his surviving daughters or daughter. He directed his trustees, when & as each of his daughters should attain twenty-one, or marry, to convey to each of them one-third part of all his real & leasehold property for her life, for her sole & separate use, with power for such daughter, by her will, to give her third to all, or one, or more of her children, as she should think proper; & in default of gift by such will, each such part to go to her children equally as tenants in common, in fee. In default of issue of any one or more of his daughters, testator directed the share or shares of such one or more dying without issue to be limited so as to go to her surviving sisters & to their issue, in like manner as their original third parts were directed to be conveyed to each of them; & in case all his three daughters should die without issue in the lifetime of their mother, then testator gave his real & leasehold estates, or the yearly income thereof, to his wife for her life, & afterwards over. He directed the shares of his daughters to be settled on them & their issue. Testator left six children, three sons & three daughters ; the shares of the sons were paid to them at twenty-five. One of the daughters died in 1876, without issue, one brother died in her lifetime leaving issue, & another without issue. Another brother was alive. The two sisters died in her lifetime leaving issue :—Held : the word "surviving" must be read "other" & the daughter's share was divisible into five shares amongst the surviving brother, the representatives of the two deceased brothers, & the issue of the deceased sisters.

10470. .]—Testatrix gave one-third of the income of a fund to her daughter M. for life, & after her death one-third of the capital of the fund to all the children of M. whom she might leave surviving who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, & she made similar gifts of the other two-thirds to her daughters C. & E. & their children ; & in case of the decease of any of her three daughters without leaving lawful issue surviving who should attain twenty-one, testatrix gave the income of the share of the fund thereby given to her daughters so dying to her surviving daughters in like manner as the income thereinbefore given to them for their respective lives, & after their decease she gave the capital to the children of her surviving daughters who should attain twenty-one per stirpes ; & there was an ultimate gift over of the fund in case of the decease of all the daughters without either of them leaving lawful issue who should attain twenty-one. C. died first, leaving her surviving two children who attained twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of E., the last surviving daughter ; M. died next, leaving her surviving two children who attained twenty-one & were still living. E. died last without leaving any issue her surviving. Upon the question who became entitled to E.'s share :—Held : having regard to the ultimate gift over, the word "surviving" in the gift to the children of testatrix's surviving daughters could not be read literally, but it ought to be construed, not as "other," but as "surviving in stock," & the children of M. were alone entitled to participate.—Re BILHAM, BUCHANAN v. HILL, [1901] 2 Ch. 169 ; 70 L. 10471. .]—Testatrix, who died in 1858, gave her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for her nephew A. & her two nieces B. & C. for their respective lives only, & after their respective deceases then in trust for their respective children who should attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue, such last-mentioned child or children taking per stirpes & not per capita, & in case any or either of her nephew & nieces should die without leaving a child or children, then the share of each of them so dying "shall from time to time go to the survivors or survivor of them & the child or children of such survivors or survivor in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to his, her or their original share or shares," & subject to the trusts thereinbefore declared testatrix gave her residuary estate unto E., who died in her lifetime. A. died in 1882 without issue. B. died in 1900, having had three children who attained twenty-one. C. died in 1917, a spinster. On a petition by the three children of B. for payment out of a fund in ct. representing C.'s original third share, & the one-sixth share accrued thereto on the death of A. :—Held : on the true construction of the will petitioners were entitled to the fund.

The absence of a gift over of the entire fund on the failure of issue of all the tenants for life is not of itself conclusive to show that the words "survivors or survivor" are to be read in their strictly literal sense.—POWELL v. HELLICAR, [1919] 1 Ch. 138 ; 88 L. J. Ch. 68 ; 120 L. T. 218 ; 63 Sol. Jo. 116.

10472. ——.]—Testator directed his trustees to hold the residue of his estate for his three children, a son & two daughters, equally among them in life rent & for their issue in fee. He then directed that, if any of his children should die without leaving issue, or if such issue should die before majority or marriage, the trustees should hold the capital of their shares for "behoof of the survivors" of his said son & daughters if more than one, or for the survivor if only one, "in the same way as is hereinbefore provided with regard to" their original shares. The testator next directed that, if any of his children should predecease him leaving issue, such issue should receive the capital which would have been liferented by their parent, & that, if any of his children should predecease him leaving no issue, their shares should be divided equally among his surviving children & the issue of predeceasing children per stirpes. Then followed a direction that, failing any survivor of his son & daughters or issue of any of them, his trustees should pay over the shares of his son & daughters to their nearest heirs & representatives in movables.

Testator was survived by his three children. The son died unmarried, survived by the issue of one of his sisters who had predeceased him, & by the other sister & her issue :—Held : the word "survivors" was used in the settlement in a stirpital sense, & included not only a child surviving in person, but also one who, figuratively, survived in his or her issue ; & accordingly, while half of the share of the son accresced to the surviving daughter & her issue, the other half accresced to the issue of deceased daughter.—CURLE'S TRUSTEES v. MILLAR, [1922] S. Testatrix devised the other three-fourths of her real estate upon similar limitations in favour of the three other children of the daughter & their issue. By a codicil she directed that, in case any of her grandchildren named in her will should die without leaving any child or children, then the share or shares of them, him, or her so dying in the hereditaments devised by her will should go to & devolve on the "survivor of survivors" of her grandchildren, & the heirs of his, her, or their respective bodies. One grandchild died a spinster. Then two of the grandchildren died leaving children. T. was the last survivor, & he died without having had a child:—Held: T. could not take his own share as "survivor," cross-remainders were to be implied between the four grandchildren, or else the words "survivor or suvivors" were to be construed "other or others," & consequently T.'s share devolved, on his death without having had a child, upon the two grandchildren, who left children, equally as tenants in common in tail.—ASKEW v. ASKEW (1888), 57 L. (2) The doctrine of implication, which has sometimes been inaccurately said to rest upon the furtherance of the general intent, in truth stands mainly upon the necessary construction of the particular provisions in the instrument; although where other provisions are contrary to the implication, they of course exclude it, & so far the general intent may be said to be let into the consideration of the question. It would be more strictly correct, therefore, to say, that the law raises estates by implication, where the words most literally taken would not express, or would not sufficiently express, the plain meaning of the writer; & where, in order to bring out that meaning, something must be understood beyond or even different from what is set down; but that no such adjustment or correction of the literal meaning can be permitted, where it is contrary to the plain meaning of other parts of the instrument (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—LOSH v. TOWNLEY (1834), Coop. temp. Brough. 372; 47 E. Where distinct legacies are given with survivorship, the general rule is, that the clause of survivorship, unless extended by particular words, attaches only to the original shares & does not affect the accruing shares, which therefore become vested in the individuals who are the survivors for the time being. That rule is recognised by LORD HARDWICKE, in Pain v. Benson, No. 10300, ante; & subsequent cases, though they have introduced exceptions, have not broken in upon it. The principal exception is, where the disposition is, not of separate legacies, but of one aggregate fund, which testator meant should remain an aggregate fund, & should not be broken into fragments, if some of the persons, to whom interests in it were given, happened to die (PLUMER, M.R.).—BARKER v. LEA (1823), Turn. & R. 413; 37 E. Testator left his three children, & also ten grandchildren, surviving him. A suit was afterwards instituted for the administration of the estate, in which the annual income was paid into ct., & accumulated during the lives of the annuitants. At the death of the last-surviving annuitant, which took place about thirty years after his death, only five of the grandchildren were living; but two of those who were dead had issue living, & the remaining three were dead without issue:—Held: the issue of the two deceased grandchildren were entitled, not only to the original shares of their respective parents, but also to the interests which such parents, if living, would have taken in the shares of those grandchildren who were dead without issue.—EYRE v. MARSDEN (1839), 4 My. & Cr. 231; 3 Jur. 450; 41 E. 10530. Use of "share."]—The word "share" alone, when there is no gift over of the whole fund, in case of the failure of all the members of the class, is not sufficient to carry over an accrued share.—EVANS v. EVANS (1858), 25 Beav. 81; 53 E. R. 566.

T. succeeded to the estates, & C. died unmarried, under twenty-seven:—Held: the whole of the moiety belonged to T.

"Share" must be held to apply to the accruing, as well as to the original share (MALINS, V.-C.).—EDMONSTONE v. FARLEY (1868), 18 L. T. 847.

10533. No gift over.] — After a bequest to testator's children for life, with remainder to their respective children, a clause of accruer of the shares of any of testator's children dying without leaving issue in favour of his surviving children was held to carry an accruing share to the then living children of testator & children of those then dead, although the will contained no gift over on the death & failure of issue of all testator's children.—Re WALKER'S ESTATE, CHURCH v. TYACKE (1879), 12 Ch. SUB-SECT. 1.—GIFTS BY REFERENCE.

10534. Whether incidents attach—Reference to mode of enjoyment.]—ANON. (1586), Godb. 99; 78 E. R. 61.

10535. ——— ———.]—Testator gave certain leasehold houses in trust for A. absolutely for her separate use, & other leasehold houses in trust for B. for her separate use, for her life; & after her decease for her children; if none, to fall into the residue; & he gave the residue in trust for A. & B. to be divided between them share & share alike, & to be paid & applied in like manner for their use & benefit the rents & profits of the leasehold premises hereinbefore settled upon them; & their receipts to be a sufficient discharge. The reference in the residuary clause is, not to the interests of A. & B. in the houses, but to the provision, that they shall take for their separate use; therefore they take the residue absolutely.—SHANLEY v. BAKER (1799), 4 Ves. 732; 31 E. R. 378.

Annotation:—Apld. Lumley v. Robbins (1853), 10 Hare, 621.

10536. ——— ———.]—Trust by will as to a moiety of the share of testator's married daughter A. for her separate use, to the end, that it may not be subject to the control, etc., of B. her present husband, or any other husband; remainder to her husband B. for life; remainder for all the children of A.; & in case there shall not be any children of A., or all shall die before twenty-one, for the survivor of B. & A. his wife, his or her exors., etc.; & as to a moiety of each of the shares of each of his two unmarried daughters, "upon the like trusts & under the like restrictions" as described concerning the share of A., "so & in such manner as that the same may be secured for the benefit of his daughters & their children, & not be subject or liable to the control of any husband they may happen to marry." One of the unmarried daughters having married, & died without issue, her husband, surviving, is not entitled to any interest in the moiety, the subject of the trust created by the will.—JUDD v. WYATT (1805), 11 Ves. 483; 32 E. R. 1174, L. C.

10537. ——— ———.]—Testator directed the interest of a sum of money to be paid to his sisters during their lives, in equal proportions, & at their deaths gave to their children the inheritance their mothers derived from his estate, & desired that his sisters should be the residuary legatees in the proportions already noticed:—Held: the sisters were entitled to the residue absolutely, & their children took no interest in it.—GRASSICK v. DRUMMOND (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 517; 57 E. R. 205.

10538. ——— ———.]—MORTIMER v. HARTLEY, No. 11093, post.

10539. ——— ———.]—Testator bequeathed £5,000 to his wife for life, & after her decease to his nephew absolutely, but if the nephew should die in the lifetime of the wife then he directed his exors. to divide the same amongst the children of the nephew; & in case the nephew should die without leaving lawful issue, then to pay the same unto & equally between his two nieces, L. & G., for their separate use, & in case one or both of the nieces should die in the lifetime of the wife, then to pay & divide the share of the niece so dying unto & equally between her children as tenants in common; & testator bequeathed all moneys in the public funds of which he should die possessed upon trust for his wife for her life, & after her death for the benefit of his nieces, L. & G., in manner hereinbefore directed of & concerning the sum of £5,000; & he gave all the residue, except moneys in the funds, to his wife absolutely. One of the nieces died in the lifetime of the wife, leaving children:—Held: the reference to the bequest of the £5,000 in the residuary gift of the moneys in the funds, by the words "in manner hereinbefore directed," might refer to the manner of taking as tenants in common, or for their separate use; the children of the niece did not therefore, by virtue of the reference, take any interest in the residue of the moneys in the funds; &, as to such moneys, so far as related to the share of the deceased niece, there was an intestacy.—LUMLEY v. ROBBINS (1853), 10 Hare, 621; 1 Eq. Rep. 129; 22 L. J. Ch. 869; 22 L. T. O. S. 40; 17 Jur. 410; 1 W. R. 285; 68 E. R. 1077.

10540. ——— ———.]—By his will testator gave a legacy "equally between my brothers & sisters now living" &, & he directed that their shares should not lapse by their deaths in his lifetime, but should go to their exors. By a codicil of the same date, he bequeathed another legacy "between my brothers & sisters in like manner as I have directed by my will":—Held: the class mentioned in the codicil were not the same as that in the will; the "manner" referred to the mode in which the class were to take, & not to the class itself, & consequently the representatives of a sister who predeceased testator took no interest in the second legacy.—Re WILDER'S TRUSTS (1859), 27 Beav. 418; 54 E. R. 164.

10541. ——— ———.]—Testator gave his estate to his wife & his four children in equal proportions; but his wife was to have "her proportionate part" for her life, & it was given afterwards to the four children; & as to "the part of his estates," thereinbefore given to his daughter, she was to have it for life, with remainder to her children:—Held: the "part" of the daughter included her share in the part given to the wife for life; &, therefore, she was only entitled to a life interest in it.—WATSON v. PRYCE (1864), 34 Beav. 71; 55 E. R. 559.

10542. ——— ——— Conditions attached by law not considered.]—Testatrix, by her will, after reciting that being joint heiress with her two sisters she was possessed of a third part of the rectorial tithes of B., gave to her sisters the third part or share, to be equally divided between them, & to be held by & subject to the same conditions by which they, her two sisters, held the other two parts or shares. At the date of the will, both of the sisters were married, & on the occasion of the marriage of each, her share of the tithes had been put into settlement:—Held: the sisters became entitled respectively to a moiety of the third upon the trusts declared by their respective marriage settlements of the shares originally vested in them in their own right.

The true rule of construction is, not to look out for any conditions which may be affixed by law to the estates of the sisters (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—ORD v. ORD (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 393; 15 L. T. 51.

10544. ——— ———.]—Testator devises freehold & copyhold at A. & elsewhere, to son in fee upon attaining twenty-one; but if he die under age & without issue, then to trustees, in trust to sell, & to pay the widow half the proceeds, & to apply the other half for daughter, same as £4,000 (post). He gave his personal estate to trustees; as to £4,000, dividends to daughter for life, independent & principal for her children; then he gave all the residue of his estates, real & personal, to his son, absolutely, upon attaining twenty-one; & if his son or daughter should die under age & without issue, survivor to take deceased's portion, real & personal, as deceased would, & as if specifically devised to survivor, his or her heirs, exors., etc., & in same manner, & upon same trusts, as before mentioned concerning same:—Held: the residuary clause did not supersede the first devise, nor did the clause of survivorship affect the devise over to the trustees; therefore, such devise in trust took effect; & the daughter & her children took the son's interest in the personalty, in the same manner as the £4,000.—BLANKLEY v. CROMWELL (1831), 1 L. J. Ch. 21.

10545. ——— ———.]—A testator devised his Upton Park estate to his five daughters & his grandson, as tenants in common, for their respective lives, with remainders over. By a codicil he devised to his son Alfred & his heirs "the life share he had given to his five daughters in the Upton Park property, in every respect whatever":—Held: Alfred took one-seventh in fee.—BEDBOROUGH v. BEDBOROUGH (No. 1) (1865), 34 Beav. 284; 55 E. R. 644.

10547. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed to G. two sums of stock, & in case of his death in testator's lifetime without issue, the two sums were to be equally divided amongst testator's nieces thereinafter named, under the same conditions & restrictions as were thereinafter mentioned respecting the several bequests thereinafter mentioned to them respectively given. Testator then gave £12,000 stock to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends, in thirds, to testator's three nieces, A., B. & C., for their lives, &, after their respective deaths, to transfer the capital, in thirds, to the children of the nieces; with limitations over, in the nature of cross-remainders, in the event of any of the nieces dying without leaving children; with an ultimate limitation, in the event of all the nieces dying without leaving children, in favour of the residuary legatee, a stranger. G. died, without issue, in testator's lifetime. The nieces had children:—Held: the children took the same interests in the stock given to G. as they did in the £12,000 Consols.

10548. —— ——.]—Testator gave an estate to his daughter E. for life, & after her death upon trusts for her children, & made similar dispositions of other estates in favour of his daughter A. & his sons J. & W. respectively, & their respective children, & gave his residuary estate to E. & A. equally. By a codicil he gave the residue to his wife for life, & after her death between E., A., J. & W. equally, "precisely in the same way as the shares before given to them in my will":—Held: the shares of the residue were not given absolutely by the codicil, but were subject to the limitations contained in the will as to the estates specifically devised.—Re LIVERPOOL DOCK ACTS, Re COLSHEAD'S WILL TRUSTS (1852), 2 De G. & J. 690; 44 E. He then gave the residue of his property, consisting of real & personal estate, to trustees; & by a codicil certain other real estates, to convert the same into money, in trust, as to one-third, for his son, J.; & the other two-thirds equally amongst his daughters, subject to such contingencies in favour of their issue, & with the like benefit of survivorship, as were before declared as to the £3,000 stock. By a deed, executed a short time before the date of the codicil, he directed £10,000 to be laid out in the purchase of land for the separate use of C., with powers to appoint to her children, & also to her husband surviving her for life; & the deed contained a distinct gift to the children in default of appointment:—Held: having regard to the settlement of the £10,000 settled on C. by the deed, B. was entitled, upon the construction of the 10555. ——.]—Testator bequeathed certain houses in trust for his granddaughter Martha, for her separate use for her life, & on her decease, in trust to apply the rents for the maintenance of her children then living, & when they should all attain twenty-one, in trust to sell & divide the produce amongst them equally; & in case Martha should die without leaving issue, to divide the produce amongst such of testator's grandchildren thereinafter named as should be living at her decease; & testator, by three separate & subsequent clauses, bequeathed other houses in trust for his granddaughters Charlotte, Sarah & Harriett, for their separate use for their lives, & repeated after each clause "& after her decease, in trust for the issue of her body in the same manner & subject to the same conditions & limitations as hereinbefore expressed in the bequest to my granddaughter Martha." In a subsequent part of his will be declared that if all his granddaughters should die without leaving issue, all the houses mentioned in his will should fall into the residue of his estate. Charlotte died leaving issue. Harriett died without issue:—Held: the houses bequeathed in trust for her went over to Martha & Sarah, as being the only grandchildren of testator living at her death.—DOUGHTY v. SALTWELL (1847), 15 Sim. 640; 60 E. R. 768.

10556. —— ——.]—Testatrix directed trustees to make an investment, & out of the dividends to pay annuities of £100 each to his two nieces & his nephew for life, & the capital to their children respectively & to apply £100 a year in the maintenance of the children of Daniel, a deceased nephew, until twenty-one when he gave them the capital fund producing this annuity. He bequeathed his residue to his two nieces & nephew & the children of Daniel "in equal shares in like manner as was thereinbefore mentioned with respect to the annual sums of £100 bequeathed to them respectively":—Held: the children of Daniel took one-fourth only of the residue.—EAMES v. ANSTEE (1863), 33 Beav. 264; 55 E. 10557. —— ——.]—Testator gave his real & personal estate to trustees as to one-fourth to A. for life, & after her decease, in trust for her children, & in default of children in trust for B., C., & D., & their issue, in the same manner as thereinafter directed respecting their original shares; as to one other fourth to B. for life, &, after his decease, in trust for his children, & in default of children, in trust for A., C., & D., & their issue, in the same manner as directed respecting their original shares: as to one other fourth part upon trust for C. & her children by reference to the share of A., using the same referential expressions as are next given concerning the remaining share; & the fourth share he bequeathed upon trust for the benefit of D. & his children upon the trusts, & subject to the powers & authorities, & with the like remainders over in default of issue, & similar & in all respects corresponding with the trusts, powers, & authorities expressed & declared concerning the one-fourth share bequeathed in trust for B. & his children as effectually as if the same trusts were there repeated. D. died unmarried: Held: the fourth share went over, upon the death of D. without issue, to the other three legatees, A., B. & C.—SURTEES v. HOPKINSON (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 98; 36 L. J. 10558. Reference to restrictions—On class of persons taking.]—A father, having eight children, devised his estate to six of them equally. Afterwards, the wife's father devised another property unto her children, to be vested at the like times, with like benefit of survivorship & provision for maintenance, & in like manner, in all other respects, so far as the nature of the property & the difference of tenure would permit, as the children were entitled to the estate of their father, under the dispositions & limitations contained in his will:—Held: the eight children participated in the second devise.—PIGOTT v. WILDER (1858), 26 Beav. 90; 53 E. 10559. —— ——.]—Bequest to the children of a deceased niece who should be living at testator's death, followed by a bequest to a nephew for life, &, after his decease, upon the like "trusts" for the benefit of his issue, & subject to the same powers, "limitations," etc., in respect to his issue, as those expressed as to the niece's children. The nephew had no child living at testator's death, but he afterwards had one child born:—Held: such child was entitled to the second legacy.—YARDLEY v. YARDLEY (1858), 26 Beav. 38; 53 E. 10561. ——— ——— ———.]—By a settlement made in 1804 real estate was settled to the use of C., third Earl of Harrington for life, with remainder to his first son, Lord Petersham, for life, remainder to the first & other sons successively of Lord Petersham in tail male, with similar remainders in succession to the eight other sons of the third earl for life, & their respective first & other sons in tail male; remainder to the third earl in fee. By his will made in 1824, the third earl gave chattels upon trust "for the person or persons who for the time being should, under the limitations in the settlement be in the actual possession of the estates, to the intent that the same chattels might be deemed heirlooms to go along & for ever be enjoyed with the estates, so far as the rules of law & equity would permit, but so, nevertheless, as that the same chattels should not, as to the effect or purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any person who under the settlement should become seised of or entitled to the estates for an estate of inheritance either in possession or reversion, or otherwise, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one, or dying under that age should leave issue inheritable under the limitations in the settlement." Testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trusts for investment in lands to be settled to the same uses as those declared in the settlement of 1804. The first tenant in tail in possession died under twenty-one, within the period allowed by the law as to perpetuities, & the next tenant in tail executed a disentailing deed:—Held: the proviso that no tenant in tail should take absolutely unless he attained twenty-one, was a condition inseparably annexed to the gift, so that any tenant in tail must take subject to it, & if the proviso was void the whole gift was void.—HARRINGTON (COUNTESS) v. HARRINGTON (EARL) (1871), L. SUB-SECT. 2.—CUMULATIVE GIFTS.

10562. General rule—Incidents of original gift apply.]—Testator created a term for debts & legacies, & gave £1,000 to his niece to be paid immediately after his decease, if she should be then married; if not, the interest of her said legacy to be paid her for life, to be calculated & paid to the day of her death or marriage; if she should die unmarried, the legacy to lapse for the benefit of the estate; & by codicil he gave her £200 in addition to what he had given her by the will:—Held: the additional legacy was to be raised out of the same fund, & subject to the same conditions; & the legatee having married after testator's death was entitled.—CROWDER v. CLOWES (1794), 2 Ves. 449; 30 E. R. 719.

10563. ——— ———.]—Testator gave a real estate & a sum of stock to A. for her life, & after her death to his brother absolutely: & he gave legacies, which he directed to be paid as soon as convenient after his death, to his nephews & nieces, & the residue of his property to his brother absolutely. The brother having died, testator, by a codicil reciting that fact, & that, thereby, the devises & bequests to his brother had lapsed, gave an annuity to his brother's widow, & directed his trustees to pay the income of the residue of his personal estate to A. for life, & gave to her all his real estates for life, &, after her death, to his trustees in trust to sell, & the proceeds to fall into his personal estate: he then gave £10,000 to each of his nieces, in addition to the legacies given to them by the will, & directed that that sum for each of them should be held by his trustees for their separate use; & he gave all the clear residue of his estate, after providing for the before-mentioned legacies, & also those given by his will, to his nephews:—Held: the legacies given to the nieces by the codicil were not payable till after A.'s death.—OVEREND v. GURNEY (1834), 7 Sim. 128; 58 E. R. 785.

10564. ——— ———.]—An additional legacy, though not so expressed, held subject to the same incidents as the original legacy.

Testator gave a legacy to a feme covert for her separate use, & by a codicil he gave to her a further annuity in addition:—Held: the latter was subject to the restriction for her separate use.—DAY v. CROFT (1842), 4 Beav. 561; 49 E. R. 456.

10565. ———.]—Testatrix gave the residue of her personal estate to twelve persons, or such of them as should be living at her decease. She then directed her real estate to be sold at a certain time, & gave the produce to the same twelve persons, & three others, or such of them as should be then living. She then added a proviso, that the "share or proportion" of S., one of the twelve legatees, should be settled to her separate use for life:—Held: upon the construction of the whole will, the proviso applied as well to S.'s share in the residue of the personalty as to her share in the produce of the realty.—COCKRILL v. PITCHFORTH (1845), 1 Coll. 626; 4 L. T. O. S. 352; 9 Jur. 223; 63 E. R. 572.

10566. ——— ———.]—Testator gave an annuity to a married woman, & directed that all annuities given by his will to married women should be for their separate use. By a codicil testator directed his exors. to pay to the married woman a legacy of £300, "in addition to the legacy mentioned in his will":—Held: the legacy was subjected to the restriction to the separate use of the married woman.—WARWICK v. HAWKINS (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 481; 21 L. J. Ch. 796; 19 L. T. O. S. 243; 16 Jur. 902; 64 E. R. 1208.

10567. —— ——.]—Testator, by will, gave his daughter an annuity of £50, &, provided she did not marry under twenty-eight, a legacy of £1,000, both for her separate use. He gave her by a codicil £5,000, upon the terms "hereinbefore mentioned." Upon receiving proposals of marriage with her from a gentleman, testator gave his "qualified consent," but said that he must hear from his daughter before he could make it absolute. He also promised by letter to give her £5,000 stock at the time of her marriage. The daughter wrote to say that she consented, & testator replied that he was too ill to attend to business, & on the following day he died. The daughter married the same gentleman:—Held: the daughter was only entitled to the £50 annuity.

The £5,000 was an additional legacy, &, being so, it was subject to the common rule, that an additional legacy shall be taken upon the same condition as is annexed to an original legacy (TURNER, L.J.).—YOUNGE v. FURSE (1857), 8 De G. 10569. —— ——.]—Testator appointed £10,000 each to his younger children, & all the residue to his eldest son; & he directed the income of the whole, until the youngest should attain twenty-one, to be applied in the maintenance of the minors. In the event of a younger child dying under twenty-one, he appointed his share to the eldest son, "in addition to the residue":—Held: the share of a younger child who died under twenty-one was not payable to the eldest until the youngest child attained twenty-one.—DUFFIELD v. CURRIE (1860), 29 Beav. 284; 54 E. R. 636.

10570. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed "a sum" of Consols to trustees for his daughter L. for life, with remainder to her children. By a codicil he directed "that the sum of £200 per annum be added to the sum" by his will "granted to his daughter L. during her life, & invested in the same manner & trusts" as governed the will:—Held: the words "during her life" were words of reference & not of limitation, & the gift by the codicil was of a sum sufficient to produce £200 a year, which was to be held for the daughter for life, with remainder for her children.—AULDJO v. WALLACE (1862), 31 Beav. 193; 54 E. R. 1112.

10571. —— ——.]—Testator by his will bequeathed as follows: "To each of my servants who shall at my death have been in my service twelve calendar months or longer one year's wages in addition to anything owing by me, & to my gardener P. £300 in addition." At the date of testator's death P. was no longer in his service:—Held: the condition precedent as to being in the service of the testator at the time of his death applied as well to the gift of £300 as to that of the year's wages, & consequently P. was not entitled to the £300.—Re BENYON, BENYON v. GRIEVE (1884), 53 L. J. Ch. 1165; 51 L. T. 116; 32 W. R. 871.

10572. —— ——.]—By her will testatrix, as survivor under a marriage settlement under which she had a life interest, gave & appointed all her property to trustees to pay the income thereof to her two daughters E. & O. in the following shares & manner—viz. two-thirds of the income to be paid to O. & one-third to E. for their lives, but should O. marry then the income was to be paid to her two daughters in equal shares. The will also provided that if one of the daughters should die in the lifetime of the other without leaving issue then her share of the income should be paid to the surviving daughter. By a codicil testatrix revoked "that part of my will which directs that two-thirds of my income should be paid annually to my daughter O. while unmarried," & direct that three-fourths—i.e. about £150, be paid her annually & also the remaining £50 should E. die without children & O. be unmarried at the time:—Held: a gift of three-fourths of the income to O. while she remained unmarried.—Re CRICHTON'S SETTLEMENT, SWEETMAN v. BATTY (1912), 106 L. 10573. Application of rule—Whether original gift must be absolute or defeasible.]—The rule that added legacies are subject to the same conditions as the legacies to which they are added is not applicable to the case, inasmuch as the application of the rule would alter the terms of the additional gift. Qu.: whether the rule applies to any cases except where the original legacy is absolute or defeasible in the party to whom the additional legacy is given.—Re MORES' TRUST (1851), 10 Hare, 171; 68 E. 10574. —— ——.]—Bequest of one thousand pounds to A., the interest of two thousand to B., &, at his death, to his children, the sum of one thousand pounds to D., the sum of one thousand pounds to B., in addition to one thousand beforementioned:—Held: the reference to the former legacy in the latter gift to B. did not diminish the previous legacy; & the latter legacy was given to B. absolutely, & not to him for life, & then to his children.

Legacies given "in addition to" previous gifts to the same person only partake of the same incidents, where the former gifts are absolute or defeasible; but the doctrine has never been extended so far as to alter an absolute gift of the latter legacy into a gift to the legatee for life, &, after his death, to other persons.—MANN v. FULLER (1854), Kay, 624; 2 Eq. that her trustees, who were also her exors., should, within a year after her decease, pay to the several persons named in a schedule to her will, the sums set opposite to their respective names, as vested & transmissible interests: in a subsequent clause she gives £3,000 to the trustees, upon trust to invest the same, & pay it to A. on her attaining twenty-one, with a proviso that it should fall into the residue, if A. died under twenty-one: by the schedule to her will, she gives to her exors. £600 in trust for A., in addition to the £3,000 given by the will:—Held: the legacy of £500 was not affected by the contingency to which the £3,000 was subject, but vested immediately.—TILBURY v. WAKEFORD (1826), 5 L. 10578. ——.]—Testator devised as follows: "I give to my granddaughter S., her heirs, exors., & administrators for ever, that dwelling-house in Tavistock Street, No. 3, in the borough of Plymouth. I also give to S. that dwelling-house & garden situate behind the above-named dwelling-house, & in the occupation of C. I also give to S. that other dwelling-house & garden situate in York Street, No. 30, the whole of which premises are in the borough of Plymouth, during her natural life; but should S. marry & have children, then, after her decease, the before-mentioned houses to descend to her children; but should S. die without issue, then the premises to become the joint property of the children of B. I also give, provided S. dies without issue, the sum of £100 to J., to be paid to him out of the before-mentioned premises":—Held: S. took an estate in fee simple in the first-mentioned house; & therefore, upon her death without issue, the children of B. were entitled only to the two other houses.—DOE d. Testator devised an estate to A. & B. successively for life, &, after their deaths, to sell & divide the produce between his grandchildren who should be living at the decease of the survivor of A. & B., except his grandsons E. & J., neither of whom was to receive anything; & he directed that the shares which would be otherwise payable to them should be paid to his granddaughter S. "in addition to her own share." E. & J. survived the tenants for life, but S. predeceased them:—Held: the two shares passed to the representatives of S.

No doubt a substituted & additional legacy is usually given on same terms as the original one. But this must be taken with this qualification; that it is consistent with the terms of the gift & the rest of the will (ROMILLY M.R.).—KING v. TOOTEL (1858), 25 Beav. 23; 53 E. R. 544.

By a codicil testator, after reciting his sister's death [in his lifetime], bequeathed the sum of £500 to a trustee for her children, but was silent as to the residue:—Held: the children were not entitled to their mother's share of the residue, & there was an intestacy as to that share.—Re GIBSON'S TRUSTS (1861), 2 John. & H. 656; 31 L. 10589. —— ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate to two trustees, in trust, out of the produce, to invest £4,000 in the funds, in trust for his granddaughter for her life, & after her death for her children, & on failure of children he directed that the capital should fall into the residue. By a codicil reciting that he had by his will given to the two trustees, in trust for his granddaughter, £4,000 5 per cents. standing in his name, & that he was desirous that such trust should be executed by three persons, he appointed another person to be a co-trustee & guardian of his granddaughter jointly with the two named in his will; & he directed that his said trustees should transfer the said stock to his granddaughter free from all deductions :—Held : testator did not intend to give £4,000 stock to his granddaughter absolutely, but merely that the trusts declared by his will of the £4,000 should be performed by three persons instead of two.—BARRY v. CRUNDALL (1835), 7 Sim. 430 ; 4 L. By a codicil, described as a codicil to his will, he left his brother B. an equal share of his effects with his sisters, to have the interest for his life, with limitations, after his decease, for the benefit of his wife & children ; & his sister S. was to have an equal share with his sister H. By a second codicil he left to his two maidservants £10 a year each for their lives. Testator's sister S. survived her husband, & died leaving two children :—Held : S. was entitled, under the first codicil, to one-third share of testator's personal estate, subject to the same limitations declared by testator with respect to the legacy of £6,000 which had been given by the will. —COOKSON v. HANCOCK (1836), 1 Keen, 817 ; Donnelly, 72 ; 5 L. 10594. —— ——.]—Testatrix, by her will, dated in 1832, directed the trustees of a fund over which she had a power of appointment to hold £1,000, part thereof, on trust for her daughter E. for her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband, with remainder to her children, & in default of children, as therein mentioned, among the other children of testatrix. She then gave other similar portions, £1,000 each, of the same fund on similar trusts for her two other married daughters, H. & F., & their husbands & families. Afterwards, H. & her husband becoming involved testatrix advanced them £1,000 out of her own moneys, taking their joint receipt for the same, & that it was in discharge of the above legacy. Afterwards, by a codicil referring to the will, & to this payment & acknowledgment, testatrix desired the acknowledgment to be cancelled ; & then expressing a fear of a deficiency of the trust fund, directed £1,000 to be paid to F. & £1,000 to E., without any express directions as to the settlement of these sums :—Held : the sums given to E. & F. in the codicil must be taken to have been given with the like restrictions, etc., as the similar amounts given to E. & F. in the will.—FENTON v. FARINGTON (1856), 2 Jur. Testator received the debt, & by a subsequent codicil, " in the place of the said intended legacy," gave his nieces £500, to be paid out of his general personal estate :—Held : the second legacies were substitutionary, & subject to the same incidents, & the nieces were not entitled to have them increased proportionably out of the undisposed of estate.—DUNCAN v. DUNCAN (No. 2) (1859), 27 Beav. 392 ; 54 E. 10596. —— ——.] — Testator gave all his personal estate to his wife for life, & he bequeathed £40 to A., & other pecuniary legacies, all of which were payable at her death. By a first codicil, he gave a legacy of £200 to C., who was not mentioned in his will, & he directed that all things in his codicil should be performed as if the same were so declared in his will. By another codicil he revoked the legacy of £40 to A., & gave her £50 :—Held : the legacy of £200 was payable at the death of testator, but that the payment of the legacy of £50 was postponed until the death of the widow.—GIESLER v. JONES (1858), 25 Beav. 418 ; 53 E. life, with remainder to his children, & revoked the will as to £2,000, part of the £3,000, from & after the devise to A. & her children, & instead of giving the said sum of £2,000 to B. & his children bequeathed the same to C. By the will testator had also given £2,000 to B. for life, with a gift over on insolvency :—Held : if the codicil had been read as an implied gift of £1,000 to B. for life, the gift over on insolvency would have attached to the £1,000 as well as to the £2,000.—Re SMITH (1862), 2 John. & H. 594 ; 70 E. By a codicil to his will testator gave B. " £2,000 instead of £1,000 as bequeathed by my said will " :—Held : following the general rule the legacy by the codicil being given instead of that by the will, was subject to the same incidents, & the payment thereof must be deferred until after the death of A.—Re COLYER, MILLIKIN v SNELLING (1886), 55 L. He devised to his granddaughter B. a like annuity of £300 to be a charge on the same property, " & to be paid to her & her children in the same manner in all respects as the annuity hereinbefore given to my granddaughter A." By a codicil reciting that B. had by his will given an annuity of £300 to each of the two granddaughters he revoked the gifts " of the said annuities," & in lieu thereof gave to each of his said granddaughters A. & B. an annuity of £150, to be payable & charged in the same manner & on the same hereditaments as the several annuities of £300 under the will. The children of A. & B. were not referred to in the codicil :—Held : the effect of the codicil was to substitute annuities of £150 to A. & B. & their respective children for the annuities of £300 given by the will.—Re FREME'S CONTRACT, [1895] 2 Ch. 778 ; *sub nom. 10601. ——.]—(1) On general principles it cannot be doubted that in a simple case of a substituted legacy, the substituted legacy is subject to the same conditions & incidents as the original legacy was subject to ; but, so far as I am aware, that doctrine has never been applied, except to a case of a substituted legacy. I am not aware that it has ever been applied to a case where the beneficiaries in a codicil are not identical with the beneficiaries in the will (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).

Where the amount of the legacy to a legatee has been altered, added to, or diminished by a codicil, & the substituted amount is given to the same person in lieu of or in addition to the original legacy, the bequest made by the codicil is subject to the same conditions & incidents as the original legacy in the hands of the original legatee (FARWELL, L.J.).

(2) This is the converse case of an absolute gift to the granddaughter, & in lieu thereof a larger sum given to the granddaughter for life, & then to her children. I know of no principle which can justify the application of the well-settled doctrine about substitution & cumulative legacies, & I know of no case which can justify the application of that doctrine in a case like this (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—Re JOSEPH, PAIN v. JOSEPH, [1908] 2 Ch. 507 ; 77 L. 10603. Application of rule—Legacy & annuity.]—Testator, after giving a legacy of £200 to his wife, directed his trustees " in addition thereto to pay to my said wife, so long as she shall continue my widow & unmarried, an annuity of £300, or otherwise in lieu & in substitution of the said annuity, at the option of my said wife if she shall prefer it, a legacy of £2,000." After the date of the will the marriage was declared null by the Divorce Ct. in a suit brought by the wife against testator. After this testator died leaving the lady surviving. The judge held that she was entitled to the legacy of £200, but was not entitled to the annuity or the £2,000. She appealed from this decision so far as it was unfavourable to her :—Held : she could not take the £2,000, for that an option to take a legacy instead of an annuity could not exist if there was no right to take the annuity ; &, moreover, a gift by way of substitution for another is subject to the same conditions as the original gift.—Re BODDINGTON, BODDINGTON v. CLAIRAT (1884), 25 Ch. 10604. —— Whether to questions of amount only.]—(1) Where a pecuniary legacy is given in a will or codicil expressly in lieu of one previously given of a different value, the cts. usually adopt the interpretation that the alteration is intended to apply to the amount of the legacy only, & that therefore the new amount is to be substituted for the amount of the original legacy & becomes subject to the same conditions & limitations. But, although this is the general rule, they do not follow it where its effect would be to introduce such limitations as would convert a gift in its terms absolute into one of a life estate only (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

(2) If a pecuniary legacy is expressly given in addition to a previous one the ct. leans to the conclusion that the intention of testator is to alter only the amount of the legacy (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).

By a codicil he revoked so much of his will as related to the distribution of his residue, & gave to his second son £20,000 sterling in lieu of his one-third of the residue, & he appointed his eldest son residuary legatee:—Held: the gift of the £20,000 was absolute, & not subject to the same limitations as the one-third of the residue.—ALEXANDER v. ALEXANDER (1842), 5 Beav. 518; 49 E. 10617. ———.]—Residuary bequest to testator's nephews & nieces per stirpes equally for their lives; & after the death of either that share of the principal to be paid equally to & among the children of such of his said nephews & nieces as should die; & if any die without leaving any child or children, that share to go to & among the survivors or survivor of them in manner aforesaid. Upon the death of one without a child that share goes to the survivors for their respective lives only, & will pass to their children respectively with the original shares: but upon the death of the last survivor without a child his shares, both original & accrued, are undisposed of; notwithstanding another has left a child.

The only question in this cause then is how the words "in manner aforesaid" are to be applied. . . . If the will, after the disposition, in case any of the nephews or nieces should die without leaving issue, to the survivors or survivor, had stopped there, it would have clearly passed the absolute interest: but I must see whether I can refer the subsequent words to any preceding part of the will. . . . I cannot help saying, though it is but a conjecture, that testator meant them to take that surviving share under the same terms, & subject to the same restrictions & limitations as the original share (LORD ALVANLEY, M. One of the nieces died a spinster, then one of the annuitants died:—Held: on the death of the annuitant her annuity did not fall into the residue, but belonged to the surviving niece, & the surviving niece took the share of deceased niece in the capital absolutely, & not subject to the trusts of her own original share, the rule being that when a separate legacy is given, & a new gift is made of that separate legacy to a legatee who takes another legacy, the intention must be clearly expressed to subject the new gift of the separate legacy to the trusts of the original share.—BOODLE v. PARTINGTON (1852), 20 L. T. O. S. 39; 16 Jur. 606.

10624. ——.]—Testator having three sons & three daughters, gave by his will residuary estate in trust to be divided into six shares, " being as many shares as " he had children, one share to be for the benefit of each child in manner following, viz., the share of sons to be paid to them as soon as convenient after testator's death, & the shares of daughters to be vested in trustees for their respective benefit as thereinafter mentioned. Provided that if any son died without having issue living at his death, the share intended for such son, & any share accruing under that proviso, should accrue to the survivors of testator's children, their exors. or administrators; & he directed his daughters' shares to be invested upon trusts therein mentioned for them & their children. By a codicil reciting that he desired to settle more distinctly the share of one of the daughters, he revoked the will as to her share, & gave it in trust for her for life, after her death for such of her children as should attain twenty-one or, being daughters, marry; & in case she should have no child living at her decease who should attain a vested interest, in trust for testator's children who should be living at her decease, & the repesentatives of such as should be dead. One of testator's sons died in his lifetime a bachelor & the above-mentioned daughter died after testator's death a spinster :—Held: (1) the surviving sons' shares, both original & accruing, vested absolutely on the testator's death, the clause of substitution, as to sons' shares operating only in case of death in the lifetime of testator; (2) the daughters' accruing shares vested in them absolutely.

We then come to the proviso with respect to the shares of sons dying without issue. This is a proviso which in different wills has different meanings, according to the intentions of testators. It may be intended to take effect by substitution or by limitation, & if by limitation it may be intended to operate generally, or may be confined to the period of the testator's lifetime. But it is not immaterial to observe that the words may operate by substitution & I think that, upon the true construction of the will, the meaning of testator was to substitute the survivors or survivor for the person who if he had survived testator, would have taken under the original gift. Of course there could be no substitution for those whose shares had been paid or transferred in his own lifetime (TURNER, L.J.).—WARE v. WATSON (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 248; 3 W. R. 496; 44 E. R. 1 Eq. 71.

10626. ——.]—Testator had three sons, J., T. & R. He devised to each, in the same form of words, a separate property for life, & after a son's death to his child or children in fee. In case any one of the sons should die without lawful issue, the property of such son was to be divided equally between the two survivors "in the same manner as the estates hereinafter devised are limited to them respectively; subject, nevertheless, to the proviso hereinafter mentioned." At the end of the three devises came the proviso in these terms: "Provided that in case any or either of my said sons shall depart this life leaving a widow, then I give the hereditaments & premises, so specifically devised to such one or more of them so dying, unto his widow & her assigns for & during the term of her natural life." The youngest son died unmarried. His two brothers divided his property between them. The eldest son died, & after him the second son, each leaving a widow, but no child: —Held: each widow was entitled to a life estate in all that had been possessed by her husband during his life.

The proviso is a limitation, & must be so construed. "Specifically" means the same thing, whether used in a devise of land or of chattels. "So" in this case is merely descriptive, & is the same as "hereinbefore." "So specifically" is therefore merely descriptive. In this will the description was meant to apply whether the property was given directly, as in the first instance, or indirectly, as in the second instance. The proviso being at the end of all the devises, must have a meaning applicable to all, & not be treated as if placed at the end of one, & thus made applicable to one only.—GILES v. MELSOM (1873), L. 10627. Whether incidents attach to alternative gift—Survival of period of distribution—Original gift.]—Testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his widow for life, & after her decease for distribution among such of his five nephews as should be living at the time of her death, in equal shares; but if any of them should then be dead leaving issue, such issue to be entitled to their father's share. One of the nephews died in the lifetime of the widow, leaving issue one daughter, who also died before the widow died, & therefore before the period of distribution: —Held: the condition annexed to the contingent gift to the parents was not to be extended by implication to the gift to the issue, & the daughter of deceased nephew, though dying before the period of distribution, took a vested immediate interest in the share which her father would have taken if alive at the period of distribution, although the amount could not be ascertained until the death of the tenant for life.—MARTIN v. HOLGATE (1866), L. A. died in testator's lifetime without male issue; B. & his son who predeceased him survived the widow:—Held: the gift to A.'s eldest son being of an absolute interest, it must, in the absence of words importing a different intention, & having regard to the context, be deemed to have been the intention of the will that the alternative gift to B. should also be absolute. The gift over to applt. in case of the death of B. without male issue was defeated if either B. or his son lived to take absolutely.—MCCORMICK v. SIMPSON, [1907] A. C. 494; 77 L. J. P. C. 12; 97 L. Testator's wife survived him. Each of his sisters had several children. 10641. -.]- a gift to one his issue is an original gift to the issue, it is not necessary for the issue to survive their own parent, but where it is substitutional it is necessary; but neither in the case of an original or substitutional gift is it necessary for the issue to survive the tenant for life.

Testator gave certain property in trust for his wife for life, & then to his nephews & nieces, or to such of them as should be living at the death of his wife, & the issue of such of them as should be then dead, "but in case all the children of my other nieces, or of any or either of them, shall die either in their respective lifetimes, or after their decease under age, & without leaving issue, then upon trust to pay, assign & transfer the share of my other nieces respectively, so dying as aforesaid, unto & equally amongst all & every my nephews & nieces, the children of my late deceased sister, E. B., & of my sister, M. M., who shall be living at such time or times, & to the issue of such of them as may be then dead, such issue to be entitled to its parent's share only." One of testator's nieces died after the death of the tenant for life, & without children:—Held: the gift over took effect though the niece never had any children; the word "issue" must be restricted to children only; the gift to the issue was an original gift, & not by way of substitution; being an original gift the issue, in order to take, need not survive the tenant for life or their own parents.

A gift to issue is substitutional when the share which the issue are to take is by a prior clause expressed to be given to the parent of such issue.

If the ct. cannot introduce such a condition where the gift to the issue (or children) is an original gift, what better reason can be assigned for doing so when the gift to the issue is substitutional (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—LANPHIER v. BUCK (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 484; 34 L. It appears to me to admit of considerable question whether, upon the words of this bequest, pltf.'s claim is not excluded by the mere circumstance that the grandchild he represents predeceased the tenant for life (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—CRAUSE v. COOPER (1859), 1 John. & H. 207; 70 E. R. 723.

One of the sons died a bachelor, & the others leaving children, some of whom died in their parent's lifetime; others survived their parent, but died before the tenant for life; & others survived both their parent & the tenant for life:—Held: the gift to the sons being an absolute gift, liable to be divested, the gift to the children was by substitution; & the gift, being substitutional, it was necessary, to entitle the children to take, that they should survive their own parents, but it was not necessary for them to survive the tenant for life.—Re TURNER (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 501; 34 L. But there is a difference in the result of the two forms of limitation, as regards those children of B. who may have died in the lifetime of their parent; if the gift be preceded by the word "and," it is an original gift, & all the children of B. will take; if it be preceded by "or," it is substitutionary, & those children only will take who survive their parent. Where a fund was bequeathed to four persons, R., E., S., & H. by name, "who should be then living, or to the children of such of them as should be then dead," the event indicated by "then" being one which might fall beyond the limit fixed by the rule against perpetuities—& S. died before the event:—Held: the gift to the children of S. was not void for remoteness, & all the children of S. who survived her participated in the gift, whether living or not at the period of distribution; but none of the children of S. who died in her lifetime participated in the gift.—Re MERRICKS' TRUSTS (1866), L. The widow was living. The younger daughter was living & had three children. The elder daughter was dead leaving a husband & child, who brought this action for administration:—Held: on the true construction of the will the children of the younger daughter took vested substitutional interests at birth not liable to be divested by their deaths in such daughter's lifetime, &, as either the younger daughter or her children must take absolutely in remainder on the widow's death, pltfs. had no interest to maintain the action.—Re BRADBURY, WING v. BRADBURY (1904), 73 L. 10649. Construction of forfeiture clause—Strictissimi juris.]—A case of forfeiture is strictissimi juris, & the party alleging it must prove it at the hearing, & no inquiry will, as in ordinary cases, be directed in regard to a forfeiture.

10653. Abortive negotiations—"Attempt" to anticipate.]—A clause of forfeiture attached to the gift of a legacy in case the legatee should "attempt or agree to assign, mortgage or otherwise anticipate" the same, is not broken by any act except such as but for the clause of forfeiture would have operated as an effectual assignment.—GRAHAM v. LEE (1857), 23 Beav. 388; 26 L. 10654. Mortgage "subject to the proviso or condition contained in the will."]—(1) Where testator makes a bequest coupled with a clause of forfeiture on bkpcy. or alienation, the ct. considers it to be his manifest intention that the bequest shall enure to the personal enjoyment & benefit of the legatee; & will therefore construe the clause, if ambiguous in its terms, in such a way as to effect that intention; (2) Semble, where there is a bequest to A. for life, with remainder to B. absolutely, followed by a clause of forfeiture of B.'s interest in the event of his bkpcy. or alienation, & B. charges or mortgages his interest in the lifetime of the tenant for life, to prevent a forfeiture the charge must have been vacated or the incumbrance destroyed before the period of distribution, that is, the death of the tenant for life, & not merely before the time of B.'s first receipt of money under the bequest.

(3) Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his wife for life, & after her death to his son absolutely, "if at the decease of my wife he shall not be or have been declared bkpt., or have taken the benefit of any Act or Acts for the relief of insolvent debtors, or have committed or done any other act, matter or thing which would make such ultimate surplus payable or transferable to or vested in or chargeable for the benefit of any other person or persons in case such surplus had been given to him absolutely & without any condition or contingency; but if he shall at any time before the decease of my wife have been declared bkpt. or taken the benefit of any Act or Acts of Parliament for the relief of insolvent debtors, or shall have committed or done any such other act, matter, or thing, then" upon trust for the son's wife for her life & after her death for her children. Testator died leaving his widow, the tenant for life, surviving. By three deeds executed in the widow's lifetime the son mortgaged his interest under the will, "subject to the said proviso or condition in the said will." All three mtges. were satisfied by the son in the widow's lifetime. On the discharge of the first two mtges. reassignments were executed, but on the discharge of the third mtge. the son took no reassignment, the mtge. deed being simply handed back to him with the seals & attestation clause cut off. The son then died insolvent, whereupon an action was brought by his only child against his widow & executrix to have it declared that the execution of the mtges. operated as a forfeiture of the son's interest:—Held: no forfeiture had taken place.—SAMUEL v. SAMUEL (1879), 12 Ch. 10655. Repudiation or cancellation of charge—No claim made by mortgagee.]—Specified freeholds & leaseholds were given by will to trustees upon trust to permit the rents to be received by H. for life, & after his death to convey to his children on their attaining twenty-one, with a proviso that if H. charged or incumbered the property, the gift to him should be absolutely forfeited, & that in such case the gift in favour of his children should at once take effect, & be acted upon by the trustees as thereinbefore directed. H. by a memorandum in writing, in 1869, charged his life estate in favour of W., W. shortly afterwards, on hearing of the clause of forfeiture, & before he had taken any benefit under the charge, repudiated the security & obtained another security from H. In 1874 the trustee of the will, by leave of the ct. in an administration suit, filed a bill against persons who were in possession of the property under a title derived from a lessee of H., to make them account for the rents. H. had no children:—Held: the memorandum of charge produced a forfeiture of the life interest of H., although W. had never claimed any benefit thereunder, & had afterwards disclaimed it, & although H. had no children, so that there were no persons to take under the gift over.—HURST v. HURST (1882), 21 Ch. 10656. ——— Before property charged becomes payable—Before distribution of estate.]—Under the will of his father, H. was entitled to a life interest in a share of residue. The will contained a proviso that he should not have power to dispose of his interest by way of anticipation & that in the event of his becoming bkpt. or doing anything whereby his share or some part thereof would become payable to or vested in some other person it should go over to his children.

Testator died in 1896, & an order for the administration of his estate was made in 1899. In 1903 H. borrowed two sums of money, & signed in favour of the lenders charges upon his interest in his father's estate. Both charges were cancelled & given up to him in July before any order on further consideration had been made in the action or anything had become payable to him in respect of his life estate:—Held: a forfeiture had been incurred, & the fact that the mtgees. released the charges before the estate was distributed was immaterial.—Re BAKER, BAKER v. BAKER, [1904] 1 Ch. 157; 73 L. J. Ch. 172; 89 L. T. 742; 52 W. R. 213; 48 Sol. Jo. 101.

10657. ——— ——— Assignment of dividend—Withdrawn before dividend due.]—(1) M. by will gave a fund to trustees upon trust to pay the income to F. "unless & until some event shall happen whereby if the same income belonged absolutely to her she would be deprived of the personal enjoyment thereof or of any part thereof." F. wrote to the acting trustee of the will, "I owe P. £260. I have arranged to find her £100 this week & I want you to pay direct to her the balance out of the next dividend due to me from the B. tea shares," part of the estate. Before the dividend became due F. paid off P. & withdrew the letter:—Held: there had been no forfeiture of her life interest.

(2) The ct. must look at the object of these forfeiture clauses. It cannot help knowing that the object is to preserve the life interest & nothing else. It may be that in same cases words are used which compel the ct. to hold that a forfeiture has been incurred though the life interest has been preserved (NEVILLE, J.).—Re MAIR, WILLIAMSON v. FRENCH, [1909] 2 Ch. 280 ; 78 L. J. Ch. 711 ; 101 L. T. 70.

10658. Assignment inoperative by lex loci.]—Testator by his will gave the residue of his estate to trustees, on trust to pay an annuity of £50 to his widow in case she should marry again, which she did, during her life, & subject thereto to pay the income to his two sisters, in equal shares, during their lives, & to pay the whole to the survivor during the remainder of her life, & after her death to divide the fund equally between testator's nephews & nieces to be paid to them at twenty-one, the share or shares of any of them dying under that age leaving issue to go to such issue, & the share or shares of any of them dying under that age without leaving issue, or leaving issue in case such issue should all die under twenty-one, to go to testator's surviving nephews & nieces, & to the issue, if any, of such of them as should be then dead, such issue to represent their respective parents, & to take equally amongst them, if more than one, &, if but one, such one only, the same share as his, her, or their deceased parent would have taken if he or she had then been living & had been a surviving nephew or niece ; & testator declared that if any of his nephews or nieces should, during the lives of his two sisters or the survivor of them, assign his or her expectant share, or any portion thereof, or should attempt so to do, then he or she so assigning his or her expectant share, or any portion thereof, or attempting so to do, should forfeit all benefit under testator's will ; & the assignment, so far as it should purport to affect any part of the trust moneys, should be null & void, & the share of the person so assigning, or attempting so to do, should go, as if he or she had never been born, to the other nephews or nieces. The survivor of testator's two sisters died in 1890. In 1876 one of testator's nieces, who had attained twenty-one, married in Australia a domiciled Australian. No settlement was made on her marriage ; but in 1879 she & her husband executed a post-nuptial settlement, which purported to assign (inter alia), her reversionary interest under the will of testator to trustees upon certain trusts. By the law of Australia this assignment was inoperative except to the extent of the husband's interest, if any, in the wife's reversionary share :—Held : (1) the forfeiture clause was valid notwithstanding that the reversionary interests were originally vested but liable to be divested ; (2) although the settlement was inoperative as regarded the wife, it was, within the meaning of the clause, an attempt to assign her reversionary share, the forfeiture had taken effect.—Re PORTER, COULSON v. CAPPER, [1892] 3 Ch. 481 ; 61 L. 10659. Document not intended as assignment—Charge on face of it.]—By a will a fund was bequeathed in trust for one for life, with a gift over in case he should " assign, charge or incumber, or attempt or affect to assign, charge or incumber " his interest in the income. On the occasion of a loan to him, he signed in favour of the lender a document which amounted in terms to an equitable assignment of his interest in the income. Notice of the document was not given to the trustees of the will, & it was subsequently destroyed by the lender. It was proved that as between the tenant for life & the lender the document was not intended as a charge or assignment, & that it would have been a fraud on the bargain between them so to use it :—Held : on the evidence, the document could have been set aside for fraud or mistake, it was therefore competent for the ct. to go behind the literal meaning, &, there had not been a forfeiture of the life interest.—Re SHEWARD, SHEWARD v. BROWN, [1893] 3 Ch. 502 ; 69 L. B. Dealings with Income Accrued Due.

10661. No prohibition in forfeiture clause.]—By a will trustees were directed to pay the income of a trust fund to testator's nephew for his life, weekly, monthly or quarterly, as they should think fit, with a declaration that if the nephew should anticipate, assign or otherwise incumber the income, or attempt so to do, the trust should be void, & the trust fund fall into the residue. Eighteen months after the testator's death & before any payment had been made to the nephew, he assigned as a security, so far as he lawfully could, without creating a forfeiture of his interest in the income of the legacy, all money due to him on account of the income, but not any future income :—Held : the assignment was valid.

I do not think that testator here intended to prohibit or contemplated any dealing whatever with arrears of interest or of income. If that be so, then, as this gentleman has done nothing beyond assigning the dividends & income already due & in arrear at the date of the assignment, there is no forfeiture (KNIGHT BRUCE, L.J.).—Re STULZ'S TRUSTS, Ex p. KINGSFORD & STULZ (1853), 4 De G. 10663. —— —— Arrears in hands of receiver.]—Testator settled a share of his estate on each of his daughters, & directed the trustees of his will, after the decease of any of his daughters who had married, to pay one-third of the income of her share to her husband, " during his life or until he shall become bkpt. or assign, charge, or incumber, or attempt, or affect to assign, charge, or incumber " the same or any part thereof. G. married one of the daughters, who predeceased him. Testator's estate was administered by the ct., & a receiver was appointed. In Nov. 1902, G. wrote a letter asking the receiver to deduct from any sum that might become due to G. on the passing of the receiver's accounts on the ensuing Jan. 5, the sum of £5 & to pay it to a certain creditor of G. It was admitted that at the date of the letter the receiver had in his hands more than £5 to which G. was entitled :—Held : G.'s letter to the receiver did not cause a forfeiture of his interest under the will as there was at the date of it sufficient money in the receiver's hands to pay the amount ; & where such a document is ambiguous it ought to be construed so as not to create a forfeiture if capable of such a construction.—DURRAN v. DURRAN (1904), 91 L. 10664. [illegible] met by sum accrued due—Further sum subsequently received—No apportionment.]—Testator gave a share in his estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his son for life, but directed that any income for the time being payable to him "shall only be paid to him so long as he shall not attempt to assign or charge same." The son by deed purported to assign his life interest by way of mtge., to secure money lent. At the date of the mtge. the trustees had in their hands a sum of £356 representing income of the son's share received by them before that date, & they subsequently received a sum of £393 representing income of the share received by them after the date of the mtge., of which sum £254 represented the apportioned part up to that date:—Held: Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), did not apply; the effect of the clause was to prevent the destination of the income being finally determined until it had actually accrued, i.e. become payable to the tenant for life; & although the son or his mtgee was entitled to the £356 neither of them was entitled to the £254.—Re JENKINS, WILLIAMS v. JENKINS, [1915] 1 Ch. 46; 84 L. General rule—No forfeiture unless contrivance to avoid prohibition.]—Where property is given with a clause of forfeiture & gift over in the event of any act of alienation by the donee the giving of a warrant of attorney, unless done as a contrivance to evade the prohibition against alienation, does not create a forfeiture.—AVISON v. HOLMES, PENNY v. AVISON (1861), 1 John. & H. 530; 30 L. S. being about to go to South Africa executed a general power of attorney to his solr. W., who was a trustee of testator's will, & on W.'s going abroad & retiring from the trusteeship in 1906 executed a power of attorney appointing his then solr. K. in his name & behalf to recover & receive all sums of money in respect of the interest under the will:—Held: the power of attorney being a mere authority to receive the income of S.'s interest under the will & apply it for his benefit, & not a colourable transaction giving his creditors an equitable charge, it did not constitute a forfeiture within the meaning of the will.—Re SWANNELL, MORICE v. SWANNELL (1909), 101 L. 10668. Power of attorney to reduce debt.]—Testator devised estates to trustees in trust for his son A. for life, & also made provisions for other members of his family, with a proviso that if they should respectively "assign or dispose of or otherwise charge or incumber the life estate, the annuities & provision so made to & for them during their respective lives as aforesaid, so as not to be entitled to the personal receipt, use, & enjoyment thereof, then & from thenceforth the annuity or life estate or interest of him, her or them, respectively, so doing or attempting so to do, should from thenceforth cease & determine & should immediately thereupon descend to the person next entitled thereto, by virtue of the limitations aforesaid, in case he, she, or they were respectively dead":—Held: the life estate of A. ceased under the proviso, (1) by his signing a memorandum, declaring that his life estate should be chargeable with a debt in case some other property should be insufficient, which event happened; (2) by his executing a power of attorney, authorising a person to receive the rents & apply them in payment of debts due to himself & others, under which A. was out of the receipt of the rents & had no control over them for eleven months; (3) by borrowing money on the credit of future rents & delivering to the lender anticipated receipts for the expected rents & an authority to him to recover & receive such rents for his own use in satisfaction of the money lent.—WILKINSON v. WILKINSON (1819), 2 Wils. No one of the children shall be allowed or shall ever sell or part with his or her share or interest in this money until it shall be divided. If on proof of any one or more of them having done so, then his or her share will from that time become the property of the other children. This stock to stand in the names of my exors." Testator died in 1831. A. died in 1836. A.'s wife died in 1843, without having married again. The youngest child of A. came of age in 1844. In 1841, J., who was one of the children of A., & who was afterwards living when the youngest came of age, having been arrested for debt, presented his petition & obtained his discharge under Judgments Act, 1838 (c. 110), for the relief of insolvent debtors:—Held: this was a "parting with" J.'s contingent reversionary interest in the capital stock within the meaning of the expression contained in the will, & further, the restraint against alienation contained in the will was valid; consequently the interest so parted with devolved to the other children of A., who were living when the youngest attained twenty-one.—CHURCHILL v. MARKS (1844), 1 Coll. 441; 14 L. 10672. Attempt to sell or dispose.' Testator, after giving several annuities, begged it to be understood that if any of his annuitants should attempt to sell or dispose of their interest in his annuities to them, which he wished only for their peculiar & particular benefit, from that moment his bequest to them was to terminate for ever, & the principal & interest of each bequest to revert to his general fund. One of the annuitants petitioned for the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, having entered the annuity in his schedule, together with the effect of the clause in the will above-mentioned, &, afterwards, the usual vesting order was made by the Insolvent Debtors Ct.:—Held: his annuity ceased on his presenting the petition.—MARTIN v. MARGHAM (1844), 14 Sim. 230; 60 E. 10673. Assignment to trustee for creditors—"Charge or alienate."] — Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to pay out of the rents £300 a year for the maintenance of his son's children, & to pay the surplus rents to his son during his life for the maintenance of himself & his family; but so as he should not have any power to charge or alienate same: provided that if his son should in any manner impede or frustrate the trusts of the will, then the surplus rents should be no longer paid to him, but should be accumulated by the trustees for the benefit of the son's children. The son conveyed his interest under the will to trustees for his creditors:—Held: thereupon, the trust for accumulation took effect.—LEWES v. LEWES (1833), 6 Sim. 304; 3 L. J. Ch. 55; 58 E. 10674. —— "Compounding."]—Under a will F. was entitled on the death of A., to a certain share of a fund. By deed made by him living the tenant for life, he assigned stock in trade, scheduled, & all his real & personal estate, using very general language, to a trustee, to sell for the payment of his creditors. No creditors were parties but some were paid under it. Afterwards the trustee sold the residue. The will contained a clause that on any legatee becoming bkpt. or mortgaging or selling or anticipating his share or compounding with his creditors his share should go over:—Held: the deed was not a composition deed & was not a forfeiture within the meaning of the will; it did not pass the share of F. under the will & that his representatives were entitled to it.—Re WALEY'S TRUSTS (1855), 3 Drew. 165; 3 Eq. 10675. Colonial insolvency—General provision against alienation.]—A legacy for life was given by a will with a proviso that in case the legatee should alien, sell, assign, incumber, transfer, or anticipate the dividends & annual produce of his legacy, the bequest should cease & be void as if it had not been mentioned in the will. The will contained a residuary bequest:—Held: the legacy was forfeited on the legatee taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act of New South Wales & surrendering his estate accordingly; & the omission of the legacy from the schedule to the petition of insolvency did not prevent the forfeiture.—TOWNSEND v. EARLY (No. 2) (1864), 34 Beav. 23; 4 New Rep. 489; 10 L. 10677. Part insolvency—"Should become bankrupt or insolvent"—Forfeiture confined to future insolvency.]—(1) Testator, having an absolute power of disposition over a fund subject to the interest of a tenant for life, directed that at the death of the tenant for life £1,000 of the fund should be invested in the purchase of a life annuity for the benefit of D., & that in the event of insolvency or alienation by D., the annuity fund should fall into residue, & he gave his residuary estate to the aforesaid tenant for life. The annuitant predeceased the tenant for life:—Held: the gift of the annuity fund failed, & the fund fell into the residue.

(2) Testator directed that if the annuitant should become bkpt. or insolvent he should forfeit the annuity:—Semble: such a direction applies only to future events, & no forfeiture would be incurred by an insolvency during testator's lifetime.—Re DRAPER (1888), 57 L. A., by deed, after reciting the will, assigned all the real & personal estate to which he was entitled in possession, remainder, or contingency, under the will, in consideration of & subject to two annuities thereinafter covenanted to be paid:—Held: the clause of forfeiture did not apply either to the estate

Testatrix died in 1871, & M. died in 1881. In July, 1878, H. was convicted of felony, & sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. Before the expiration of his sentence he obtained a ticket of leave, & commenced this action for the administration of the estate of testatrix, & claimed the arrears of interest :—Held : he had not been deprived of the actual enjoyment of the life interest by any operation of law ; & he was entitled to all arrears of interest.—Re DASH, DARLEY v. KING, KING v. DARLEY (1887), 57 L. 10688. Discretion in court to deprive—"Liable to be deprived."]—G. by her will gave, subject to a life interest therein to her husband, a share of a certain fund in trust for her son during his life, " provided always that if "—her said son—" shall at any time become bkpt. or assign, anticipate, or incumber the income, or any part thereof, or shall do or suffer anything whereby or in consequence whereof either directly or by operation of law he would, if absolutely entitled for life to such income, be deprived or be liable to be deprived of the beneficial enjoyment thereof, then my trustees shall during the then remainder of the life of "—her son—" apply such income or so much thereof as my trustees shall think fit, for or towards the maintenance or otherwise for the benefit of " her son, his wife & children, as therein mentioned. The husband died on Nov. 10, 1894. Two bkpcy. petitions were presented against the son, the available act of bkpcy. being non-compliance with a bkpcy. notice served on him on Oct. 6, 1894. On Feb. 20, 1895, a receiving order was made on the first petition, but this order was discharged by the Ct. of Appeal on Mar. 15, 1895. The second petition was on Mar. 30, 1895, dismissed. It appeared that at or about the end of Jan. 1895, there would be in the hands of the trustees a sum of about £450 applicable on the trust in favour of the son, his wife & children. Upon a summons asking how the trustees were to deal with the income :—Held : the words " be liable to be deprived " must be read as including acts which so far as the person who commits them is concerned put it out of his power to have any voice in the matter & leave it in the hands of a ct. of justice to say whether he is to be deprived, & the act of bkpcy. committed by him in the lifetime of his father was such an act.—Re LOFTUS-OTWAY, OTWAY v. OTWAY, [1895] 2 Ch. 235 ; 64 L. 10689. Becoming under "legal disability"—Disability arising from act of law.]—(1) Testator, subject to a life estate to his wife, gave half his residuary estate to his son ; but in case the son should at the death of the wife be " under any legal disability in consequence whereof he would be hindered in or prevented from taking the same for his own personal & exclusive benefit," testator gave the same over to the son's wife & children. Shortly before the widow's death the son, who was one of the exors., was found indebted to the estate in £5,188, & an order was made directing him to pay that sum, & declaring his interest under the will liable to make it good. He had also heavily incumbered his interest :—Held : " legal disability " meant a disability of the person arising from act of law, & neither the charge by the order nor the mtges. created such a legal disability as would cause the gift over to take effect.

(2) The son on the day of his mother's death, but before her death, was adjudicated bkpt. on his own application ; but in a few days the adjudication was annulled on the ground that it ought never to have been made :—Held : this bkpcy., having been a mere contrivance on the part of the son, ought not to be regarded.—Re CAREW, CAREW v. CAREW, [1896] 2 Ch. 311 ; 65 L. No part of the annuities could be paid to the annuitants during the war by reason of the above Act, but the accumulations were retained by the exors., as no order was made under the above Act, s. 4, vesting the annuitants' interests in the custodian :—Held : (1) as above Act only suspended payments to the alien enemies & did not determine the ownership & ultimate destination of their annuities, those annuities were not forfeited ab initio ; (2) the annuities were forfeited & determined in the case of the German nationals as from Jan. 10, 1920, by virtue of the charge imposed by the Treaty of Peace with Germany & the Treaty of Peace Order, 1919, & in the case of the Austrian national as from July 16, 1920, by virtue of the charge imposed by the Treaty of Peace with Austria & the Treaty of Peace (Austria) Order, 1920 ; (3) the accumulations of the annuities until those respective dates became subject to the charges & payable therefore to the custodian or the administrator of Austrian property, as the case might be.—Re LEVINSTEIN, LEVINSTEIN v. LEVINSTEIN, [1921] 2 Ch. 251 ; 91 L. Testator died on Aug. 22, 1914, during the war. The annuity was therefore accumulated in the hands of his legal personal representative, who made the proper returns to the custodian under the above Act, s. 3, but no vesting order was made under sect. 4. By the Treaty of Peace (Austria) Order, 1920, the annuity & its accumulations were, as from July 16, 1920, charged in favour of the Administrator of Austrian Property, to secure (inter alia) payment of debts owing by Austrian to British nationals:—Held: the charge created by the Treaty of Peace Order was not an involuntary alienation or encumbrance within the meaning of the will, so that the current annuity since July 16, 1920, was not forfeited, but was payable to the Administrator of Austrian Property.—Re BIEDERMANN, BEST v. WERTHEIM, [1922] 2 Ch. 771; 91 L. 10694. Settlement on wife & children excepted—Settlement on wife only—Past age of child bearing.]—Testator, who died in 1920, bequeathed certain interests to his children, subject to forfeiture upon alienation, except any alienation by way of settlement upon a husband or wife & children either before or after marriage. Pltf., one of testator's children, who had married in 1892 H., & of which marriage there had been &, on account of the ages of the spouses, there could be no issue, proposed to settle his interests under the will in favour of his wife, H., for life, with remainder to the child, or children, if any, of the marriage living at her death, with remainder to H. absolutely:—Held: such a settlement, although in form a settlement on the wife & children, yet, in the circumstances, was in effect a settlement on the wife alone; but, as on the true construction of the exception from the forfeiture clause, pltf. was entitled to select his wife to the exclusion of the children, the settlement would not create a forfeiture.—Re GALSWORTHY, GALSWORTHY v. GALSWORTHY, [1922] 2 Ch. 558; 91 L. SECT. 31.—HOTCHPOT CLAUSE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

10697. Nature of clause—Charging clause.]—A declaration in a will that all moneys advanced to any of testator's children, or his or her wife or husband, should be brought into hotchpot & accounted for on the distribution of his estate was held not to cover two advances by way of loan to the husband of one of testator's daughters, one of a sum of £1,000, secured by promissory note given before the date of the will, & another of a sum of £650, also secured by promissory note given after the date of the will. This clause had not had the effect of altering the character of a transaction in the nature of a debtor & creditor transaction. Such a clause is a charging & not a discharging clause, & applies primarily to advance by way of anticipatory portion:—Held: accordingly, that these debts are personally recoverable.—Re WARDE, WARDE v. RIDGWAY (1914), 111 L. T. 35; 58 Sol. Jo. 472.

Annotation:—Consd. Re Barker, Gilbey v. Barker, [1918] 1 Ch. 128.

10698. Validity of clause—"In default of direction to contrary in writing."]—Under a will & codicil children of testator were given shares in his residuary estate. The will provided that moneys which testator had given or covenanted to give to any child "on his or her marriage or otherwise for his or her advancement or establishment in life" should "in default of any direction to the contrary in writing under my hand" be taken in or towards satisfaction of the child's share & "brought into hotchpot & accounted for accordingly." On the subsequent marriage of a child, testator, in the child's marriage settlement, covenanted to pay to the settlement trustees an annual sum of £300 during the joint lives of himself & other persons, & by the settlement declared that the sums payable under the covenant should "not be taken in satisfaction of any share" which the child might take in the testator's residuary estate under his will. Testator afterwards made a second codicil confirming his will:—Held: (1) the hotchpot clause was not invalid as being in conflict with the Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), inasmuch as its words might be reasonably construed as requiring to be brought into hotchpot only sums answering a particular description, namely, sums advanced free of certain conditions; (2) the moneys paid under the covenant had a condition attached to them & were not subject to the hotchpot clause; this construction was made clearer by the second codicil.

10701. General rule—Construction to give effect to whole will.]—Testator gave a fund to four persons or any of them, in such shares, etc., as A. should appoint, & in default equally. He directed that such four persons should bring into hotchpot the amount of advances he might make to any of them in his life:—Held: the hotchpot clause operated only on the unappointed fund, if any.

If the ct. can make all parts of the will consistent, it is bound to do so, & for that purpose it must look at the whole scope of it, in order to ascertain the real intention of testator. Looking at the will in that view, I think it may be so construed as to produce no inconsistency, by limiting the operation of the clause to that part of the fund unappointed by the widow (ROMILLY, M.R.).—BROCKLEHURST v. FLINT (1852), 16 Beav. 100; 51 E. R. 715.

10702. ——— ———.]—Testator gave his residuary estate to trustees, whom he also appointed his exors., in trust for sale, & to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his six children, nominatim, in equal shares, including two sons, F. & J.: &, after reciting that he had already advanced £4,000 to his son F. & £500 to his son J., he declared "that neither of my said sons, nor any of my children who shall receive from me any sum of money for their advancement in the world, shall be entitled to any part of my residuary estate without bringing the said sums of £4,000 & £500, & all other sums so given to any of my said children, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum from the times of advancing the same respectively, into hotchpot." By a codicil testator revoked the provision made by his will in favour of his son J., thereby causing a lapse of J.'s one-sixth of the residue. Testator died leaving his widow & his six children his next of kin:—Held: (1) the codicil must be read as if it expressly declared a trust in the exors. of the lapsed share of residue for testator's wife & children according to the Statute of Distributions: & accordingly, reading the will & codicil as one instrument the hotchpot clause applied to the shares taken by the children under the codicil, but it did not apply to the widow so as to increase her share under the codicil; (2) the £4,000 & £500 advanced to F. & J. respectively, together with interest at 5 per cent. up to testator's death, & interest at 4 per cent. on the aggregate amount in each case from the death, were therefore ordered to be brought into hotchpot in ascertaining their shares of residue.

(3) In the absence of any direction by testator to the contrary, advancements to his children on account of their portions bear no interest up to his death, but from his death they bear interest at 4 per cent.

(4) The clause seems to me from its nature to apply to children & to children only; it appears to me to be contrary to the meaning of the will to say that the clause applies to the share of the widow (JESSEL, M.R.).—STEWART v. STEWART (1880), 15 Ch. 10704. Will containing declaration of principle—On which money to be brought into hotchpot—Statement of figures on which principle based—How far binding.]—Testator having directed an allotment of his residuary estate in particular shares among his children, recited that he had made provisions by advancement for some of them on marriage, & then proceeded to direct that "such advances should be brought into hotchpot," adding a declaration of the principle on which the money was to be brought into hotchpot upon a statement of figures & calculation of the amount of advancements, & of his residuary property:—Held: the calculation of testator was only an illustrative example of his meaning, & the bringing into hotchpot should be according to the legal meaning of that term.—MACLAREN v. STAINTON (1861), 3 De G. 10705. Whether advances before date of will included.]—Testator, after making certain bequests in trust for his children, declared that in case he should at any time during his life pay or make any advance of any sum or sums of money to, for, or in favour of any one or more of his sons & daughters, with a view of promoting & advancing him, her, or them in life, it was his will that no such son or daughter so promoted or advanced should be entitled to share in the said trust moneys, stocks, funds, shares, & securities under or by virtue of his will, without bringing the sum or sums so advanced & paid to him, her or them into hotchpot & accountings for the same accordingly:—Held: this language included advances made by testator to his sons both before & after the date of his will.—Re DAVIES'S ESTATE, DAVIES v. ATKINSON (1870), 23 L. 10706. Clause authorising trustees to make advances to tenants for life.]—A proviso in a will authorising trustees, notwithstanding anything thereinbefore contained—i.e. notwithstanding (inter alia), gifts of income to the children, followed by gifts of capital to the grandchildren, to apply moneys out of the capital for or towards the advancement or preferment of the children, limited to a certain amount in the case of each child, is a proviso which contemplates the bringing into account of such sums as were so advanced as against the share of the stirps of the child to whom such advancement was made.—Re SPARKES, KEMP-WELCH v. KEMP-WELCH (1911), 56 Sol. Jo. 90.

10707. Supplying omission by inference.]—Testator devised his family estate upon trust to raise by mtge. the sums of £4,000, £3,000 & £3,000 for the benefit of F., G. & K., respectively for life, with certain limitations over. Subject to these charges the estate was devised upon certain limitations, which had determined, with an ultimate trust for sale. This, in the events which had happened, had taken effect. The proceeds of sale were to be held on trust for five of testator's cousins, including F., G. & K., as should be living when the direction for sale came into operation, in equal shares, but so that if F., G. & K. "or any of them shall then be living or shall have previously died leaving issue then living" such of the sums of £4,000, £3,000 & £3,000 "as shall have been so set apart for the benefit of the or more of them so dying & her issue" should be brought into hotchpot ; & there was a proviso that if any of testator s five cousins should die before the direction for sale of the estate should come into operation leaving a child or children living at the time when such direction for sale should come into operation, such child or children should take his, her, or their parent's share. The said sums of £4,000, £3,000 & £3,000 were duly raised for the benefit of F., G. & K. respectively. F. & G. were living at the date when the direction for sale came into operation ; K. died previously to that date, leaving issue one child :—Held : some blunder having evidently been made in the will, the latter part of the hotchpot clause must be treated as fitting or intended to fit the introductory part, & F. & G., though living, must bring into hotchpot the sums of £4,000 & £3,000 respectively.—Re HAYGARTH, WICKHAM v. HAYGARTH, [1913] 2 Ch. 9 ; 82 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—APPLICATION OF CLAUSE.

10708. To what persons—Children of beneficiary.]—Testator, who had lent money to his son J., bequeathed his residuary estate to J. & his other children equally for life, with remainder over to their children, & he declared that neither of his children should receive anything until they should have accounted for any sum lent by him to them. Testator afterwards agreed to accept a composition on his debt, but which was not paid at his death. Semble : the son was only liable to account for the composition :—Held : the son's debt was not to be deducted from his children's interest.—SILVERSIDE v. SILVERSIDE (1858), 25 Beav. 340 ; 53 E. R. 666.

Annotation :—Consd. Re Ainsworth, Millington v. Ainsworth, [1922] 1 Ch. 22.

10709. —— ——.]—Testator by his will gave all his residuary estate, including certain leasehold estates, some of which were reversionary, to his trustees upon trust for his wife for life, & after her death to be divided into seven shares for the benefit of his seven children, & if W., one of his sons, should die under twenty-one, his share to accrue to testator's other children living at his decease, or their issue. The shares of the daughters were settled. The hotchpot clause provided that his son J. & his daughters H. & C. should bring in the sum of £1,000 each, before division of his residuary estate. W. died before testator under twenty-one. The other six children survived him & attained twenty-one. C., one of the daughters named in the hotchpot clause, & her husband, died in the widow's lifetime leaving children. The widow died in 1865 :—Held : the hotchpot clause applied to the children of C., so that they must bring in £1,000 before a division of testator's residuary estate.—LANE v. BROWN (1871), 25 L. T. 152.

10710. —— ——.] — Testator gave real & personal property to trustees upon trust to convert, & after the death or second marriage of his wife, to hold the proceeds in trust for his child or children living at that time, & the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period, such objects to take as tenants in common according to the stocks, & not to the number of the individuals composing the class.

His real estate was to be considered as converted from his death, & it was declared that no child, to whom or to whose husband he should have paid any portion in his lifetime, should participate in the trust property without bringing the portion so paid in testator's lifetime into hotchpot. On the marriage of B., one of his daughters, in his lifetime, & before the date of the will, testator covenanted to stand seised of a freehold house to the use of B., her heirs & assigns, for ever. B. having died leaving issue :—Held : the hotchpot clause could not be extended to the issue of testator's children, so that the value of the house given to B. was not to be deducted from the share of her issue who should be living at the death or second marriage of testator's widow.—HEWITT v. JARDINE (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 58 ; 26 L. T. 546.

10711. —— Wife & children of beneficiary.]—By his will, testator divided his property between his son & two married daughters, & he declared that the debts due to him from his son & his two sons-in-law should be "paid or accounted for to his exors.," before his children should receive any part of his estate. By a codicil he cut down his son's interest to a life-estate, & gave interests in share to his wife & children :—Held : the son was not bound to pay his debts for the benefit of his wife & children, but only to bring the amount into hotchpot as regarded his two sisters. —WHITE v. TURNER (1858), 25 Beav. 505 ; 53 E. R. 730.

10712. —— Wife of beneficiary.]—Testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees & directed the income to be paid to his son & three other persons during their joint lives ; & that on the decease of his son, "the share of the income of the residuary estate to which he would from time to time, if living, be or become entitled," was to be paid to his wife, A., for life ; & on the decease of the survivor," such a part or share of the principal as his son would, if then living, from time to time, for the time being, be entitled to of the income," was to be for all the children of his son. In another part of his will testator, reciting that he had advanced his son £284 10*s.*, declared that it should be treated as a debt due by him, & that he should account for it to his exors., who were to retain same out of the share of his son of the income of the residuary estate. The son survived testator, but died before his share of income, which had been duly retained by the exors., sufficed to satisfy the £284 10*s.* :—Held : the exors. were to retain the balance out of the income given to the wife.—KNIGHT v. STERRY (1854), 18 Jur. 928.

10713. —— Husband of beneficiary.]—Testator, on the marriage of his daughter, gave the husband £1,000 jocularly in exchange for his snuffbox. By his will, testator gave each of his daughters £1,000, but provided that in case any daughter should have received from him any sum advanced "by way of marriage portion or advancement," it should be deducted from the legacy :—Held : under the circumstances, the £1,000 given to the husband of the daughter was not to be deducted.—M'CLURE v. EVANS (1861), 29 Beav. 422 ; 30 L. J. Ch. 295 ; 3 L. T. 870 ; 9 W. R. 428 ; 54 E. R. 691 ; sub nom. M'CLURE v. DAWSON, 7 Jur. N. S. 204.

10714. Clause conditional on happening of event—Failure of condition.]—Testator having contracted to purchase a real estate, devised it to his son A. & his issue, & he bequeathed his residue in moieties between his sons A. & G. But he directed that £10,000 should be debited against A.'s moiety, as an equivalent for the real estate devised to him. Before testator's death the contract was rescinded : —Held : no deduction ought to be made from A.'s moiety of the residue.—NUGEE v. CHAPMAN (No. 1) (1860), 29 Beav. 288 ; 54 E. R. 637.

10715. —— Whether condition dispensed with.]—Testator gave all his property equally among his three daughters, S., M. & J., & directed J., within twelve months after attaining twenty-one, to bring into hotchpot an estate B. to which she was separately entitled. On her marriage, subsequently to the date of the will, her estate, at testator's instance, was settled on herself for life, remainder to her husband for life, remainder as she should appoint among her children, & was subsequently, also by testator's advice, sold, & the proceeds held on the same trusts. In a suit to administer testator's estate :—Held : J. must bring into account the proceeds, less the costs of sale, of estate B.—MIDDLETON v. WINDROSS (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 212 ; 42 L. J. Ch. 555 ; 21 W. R. 822.

SUB-SECT. 4.—OPERATION OF CLAUSE.

10716. Duration—Member of class becoming entitled to payment.]—Testator, who had been twice married, & had three sons by the first marriage, & a son & a daughter by the second, gave his residuary estate to his five children, share & share alike, the shares of his sons to be payable at twenty-one, & of his daughter at that age or upon marriage, with a gift over in case of death before the shares became payable ; & he directed that in case his three children by his first wife should receive any moneys which should become payable to them as the children of their mother, such moneys should be considered as a deduction from the shares of such children, it being his desire that all his children should share & share alike. After the eldest child attained twenty-one, but before any of the rest attained that age, the children of the first marriage became entitled to a fund as children of their mother :—Held : as the share of this fund coming to the eldest son could not be deducted from his share of the residue, & it was the intention of testator that the proviso in his will should operate on all the children alike, no deduction could be made from the shares of the other children of the marriage.—STARES v. PENTON (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 40.

10717. Notional increase of testator's estate.]—Testator, after providing for the payment of his debts, directed that his residuary estate should be divided amongst his nine children equally if it did not exceed £40,000, but if it exceeded that amount, in such a way that the shares of his sons should be one-twentieth greater than the shares of his daughters. He then recited that he had covenanted, in the marriage settlement of one of his daughters, to make a certain provision for her, & directed that any money paid by his exors. to the trustees of the settlement in pursuance of the covenant should be taken pro tanto as part of the daughter's share under the will, & brought into hotchpot & accounted for accordingly. The state of testator's property was such that it exceeded £40,000 if the amount which the exors. became liable to pay under the covenant was included in it for the purpose of distribution, but not otherwise :—Held : the effect of the hotchpot clause was to make the estate for the purpose of distribution as if the debt created by the covenant had never existed, & it must be distributed as exceeding £40,000.—FOX v. FOX (1870), L. R. 11 Eq. 142 ; 40 L. J. Ch. 182 ; 23 L. T. 584 ; 19 W. R. 151.

10718. Exclusion of set-off of debt against specific legacy.]—Testator who made advances to his son both before & after the date of his will, gave a legacy absolutely & a share of residue, whether absolutely or contingently, was doubtful, to such son, & directed that advances to his children should be charged upon the shares of residue to which they should respectively be "absolutely entitled under the trusts aforesaid." The advances to the son exceeded the amount of his legacy :—Held : as to his legacy, assuming the share of residue, to be contingent, there was a sufficient indication of intention that the advances should not be set off against the legacy.—SMITH v. CRABTREE (1877), 6 Ch. D. 591 ; 25 W. R. 824.

10719. Reversionary interest of testator in sum brought into hotchpot—Instructions in will for equal division of residuary estate—Whether clause operative.]—Testator directed his exors. & trustees to convert his whole estate into money, & to stand possessed of the clear residue in trust for his two children in equal shares. In the case of his son, he had covenanted with the trustees of the son's marriage settlement that his exors. would pay to them £10,000 to be held upon trust for the son for life, with remainder to the son's wife for life, with remainder as to the capital for the children of the marriage, & in case of there being no child the capital was to be in trust for testator absolutely. By a hotchpot clause in the will, any sum given "to or with any child" on his or her marriage was to be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of such child, & brought into hotchpot. The son died without issue :—Held : testator's trustees must specifically appropriate & allot to the son's share under the will testator's contingent reversionary interest in the £10,000 not under the hotchpot clause, but under the directions in the earlier part of the will, as the only way to effect an equal division as directed between the son & the daughter.—WHEELER v. HUMPHREYS, [1898] A. 10720. Whether release of personal liability.]—Testator had made advances by way of loan to each of his sons on the understanding that they were to carry interest, but that testator would not enforce payment, & that if unpaid the advances were ultimately to be brought into account in the division of testator's estate. Testator never required any repayment, but parts of the sum were repaid spontaneously. By his will testator gave his residuary estate to his wife upon trust to receive the income & apply the same for her own use for life, & after her decease he gave the residue to trustees upon trust to divide the same among such of his children who should then be alive, the issue of any deceased child to take his or her parent's share. The will, as altered by two codicils, contained a proviso that if a son should at the death of testator's wife be an undischarged bkpt. his share should be held in trust for his wife, & a direction that in making such division any advances made to any son during testator's lifetime which had not been repaid should be brought into account by him with interest at 2 per cent., from the date of the advance to the date of testator's wife's death :—Held : the sons were not released from the obligations which they were under as debtors to repay the advances made by testator, & testator's widow was entitled during her life to the interest on the amount of the advances.—Re YOUNG, YOUNG v. YOUNG, [1914] 1 Ch. 976 ; 83 L. declared that in case he should make any advance of money to any of his children, or to the husbands of his daughters, which should not have been repaid, or the interest of which, if reserved, should not have been duly paid at the time of his decease, such child or children should not be entitled to receive any part or share of his property until he, she, or they should have accounted for & brought into hotchpot such sum or sums of money as should have been so advanced & the interest thereof. Testator sold his business to the husband of one of his daughters for a certain sum, payable at the expiration of five years from the date of the contract. Testator died within the five years :—Held : as the purchase-money was not payable in the lifetime of testator, there was no advancement within the meaning of the above clause.

Personal property under the intestacy of the father not a satisfaction.

The word "given" means the same upon the whole as "advanced & preferred in his lifetime" ; & my opinion is, that what is taken by intestacy is not advanced in the lifetime of the parent ; & there is no principle requiring that what a child would take by intestacy of personal estate is within the meaning of the clause, if what he would take for want of a devise of real estate is not to be so considered ; for the word "portion" is in ordinary cases applied to both (LORD ELDON, C.).—TWISDEN v. TWISDEN (1804), 9 Ves. 413 ; 32 E. W. had no property of his own, & testator, who was not a party to the contract, paid the £300, & he & W. gave their joint & several promissory notes to the vendor for the instalments. Testator paid the amount due on the first promissory note, but died before any of the others became due, having by his will, dated in Oct. 1885, given benefits to his sons, & declared that before any of them should participate under his will they should repay all sums of money advanced to them during his lifetime, & if unable to do so, "such advances" should be taken as part of their shares under the will. Shortly after testator's death W. executed a creditor's deed, whereby he assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, & the creditors released him, but reserved their rights as against his sureties. Nothing further having been paid in respect of the purchase-money, the vendor proved under the deed for the whole balance secured by the remaining promissory notes, & failing to obtain payment, carried in a claim against the estate of testator, & the exors. paid the amount less a discount :—Held : (1) the sums paid by testator during his lifetime were, & those paid by his exors. after his death were not, advances to be taken as part of W.'s "share" within the meaning of the clause in that behalf in the will of testator ; (2) the contract for purchase being a contract by the son alone, the giving of the joint 10734. ——.]—Testator, by his will, gave his property to his wife for life, & after her death equally between his children, subject to a proviso directing that his trustees should deduct from the share of his daughter M. the sum of £200 which he had advanced to her, & add it to his personal estate; & that if, at the period of distribution, M. "should be indebted to any or either of her brothers or sisters in respect of advances made to her, his trustees should be empowered to deduct all or any such debts or advances from her share, & pay the same to the brother or sister to whom the same might be owing." M. had borrowed from one brother £100, on a promissory note bearing interest, & had borrowed other sums from another brother. Nearly all these debts had, before the time of distribution, become barred by Stat. Limitations:—Held: the intention of testator was to put advances by brothers & sisters on the same footing as advances by himself, & that interest, therefore, ought not to be deducted.

I think the fair interpretation of testator's words is, that he intended the advances to " allowed for as advances, not as debts; &, therefore, only the capital ought to be taken into account, & not any interest accrued before the estate became divisible (JAMES, L.J.).—POOLE v. POOLE (1871), 7 Ch. App. 17; 25 L. T. 771; 20 W. R. 133, L. JJ.

Upon the question whether the unpaid rent for the twelve years prior to the extinguishment of the estate of testatrix in the farm ought to be deducted from the son's share:—Held: under Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 (c. 27), & 1874 (c. 57), all the rights of the reversioner in the farm had become extinguished, & the unpaid rent was no longer owing to her estate, & should not be deducted from the son's share.—Re JOLLY, GATHERCOLE v. NORFOLK, [1900] 2 Ch. 616; 69 L. 10739. ——.]—Where, with the dominant intention of producing equality between legatees, testator directed that a debt due from his son should be deducted from the moiety of his residuary estate bequeathed to trustees upon trust for the benefit of the son & his children, & subsequently in the liquidation of his son's affairs arrangement received a dividend on the debt, direction as to the deduction of the debt from moiety bequeathed for the benefit of the son his children becomes operative on the death of testator to the extent of the balance of the debt which remained due, notwithstanding that under the bkpcy. laws the son was released from his indebtedness to testator.

Testator by his will dated Nov. 20, 1873, directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary trust funds after the decease of his widow as to one equal moiety in trust to pay the income to his son Richard during this life & after his decease for his wife during her life & on her death as to the capital for the children of his son, & testator declared similar trusts of the other moiety for [illegible] daughter her husband & their children & he directed that the interest to accrue on the pro[illegible] note for £600 which he held of his son should be deducted from his moiety of the rents & interest of the trust funds & that the principal should be allowed out of the residuary trust funds bequeathed to the children of his son. By a codicil dated Nov. 18, 1874, testator after stating that he had, since the date of his will, paid for his son a further sum of £200 making in all £800, directed that the interest on the £800 during the life of his son should in the first place be deducted by his trustees from the moiety of the rents & interest bequeathed to his son by his will & that the principal sum of £800 should also be deducted out of the share of his residuary trust funds bequeathed to the children of his son. On Nov. 23, 1874, the son filed a petition under Bkpy. Act, 1869 (c. 71), s. 125, & in the liquidation by arrangement testator proved for the £600 secured by the promissory note, & on May 15, 1875, a certificate of discharge was given to the son, thereby releasing him from all his indebtedness to testator. Testator received a dividend of 3*d.* in the £ in the liquidation by arrangement of his son's affairs amounting to £7 10*s.* & died on Mar. 25, 1876. This summons was issued to determine whether the directions contained in the codicil as to the £800 & interest ever became operative :—Held : the intention of testator being to produce equality between the shares of the residuary legatees the directions in the codicil as to the £800 & interest became operative on the death of testator except to the extent of the sum received by him in the liquidation by arrangement of his son's affairs.—Re AINSWORTH, MILLINGTON v. AINSWORTH, [1922] 1 Ch. 22 ; 91 L. The twenty-first page of the ledger was not admitted to probate. The sums entered therein were not in all instances the true amounts actually received by the children :—Held : the will must be read as if the entries in the ledger were incorporated into it, & the entries were conclusive for the purposes of the will.—QUIHAMPTON v. GOING (1876), 24 W. 10744. To vary amount of advances.]—Testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his two sons & four daughters equally, & declared that all such sums of money as he had then already advanced, or should thereafter advance, to or for the benefit of either of his children, as should appear in any account in his handwriting kept by him for that purpose, or as should be shown in any other manner, should be considered & taken in full for or, as the case might be, in part of his or her share of & in the trust estate. Subsequently to the date of his will testator advanced to one of his sons £1,575, & to the other £1,560. He afterwards wrote letters to each of them stating that it was his intention to make a present to them of sums of £640 & £650, part of the £1,575 & £1,560, respectively, & requiring them to send him promissory notes for the balance :—Held : these letters were not admissible in evidence to vary the operation of the proviso contained in the will, & the sums of £640 & £650 must be brought into account by the sons.—SMITH v. CONDER (1878), 9 Ch. 10745. Destruction—Of account book incorporated into will.]—Testator, who died in May 1886, by his will, dated in Dec. 1871, disposed of all his property in favour of his children, & declared that whereas he had advanced, or might advance, for the benefit of his children, certain sums towards their advancement in life or for their benefit, & all which sums respectively would appear & be mentioned in a book marked " A." & signed by him, every sum of money appearing or mentioned in such book to have been so advanced or paid on account of any child should be taken in or towards satisfaction of such child's share, & brought into hotchpot. In Jan. 1886, testator tore from the book marked " A." several leaves, upon which entries of such advances had been written, & directed them to be burnt in his presence, & wrote on the book, the cover of which was preserved, a memorandum, stating that the book had been destroyed by him. It appeared that some of the sums advanced had been advanced before the date of the will, & others subsequently. An originating summons was taken out for the purpose of determining the effect of the above clause :—Held : the book would probably have been admitted to probate if it had contained writing ; & if a document formed part of a will it was liable to revocation in the same manner as the will itself ; therefore, as the book had been destroyed by testator, no sum advanced by him, whether before or after the date of the will, could be brought into hotchpot.—Re COYTE, COYTE v. COYTE (1887), 56 L. By a codicil made about a year afterwards he recited that he had paid the £3,000 & other sums for which he was bound for J. to an amount exceeding £5,000 in the whole, & directed that if J. should not before his death have repaid to him £5,000 at least, the sum of £5,000 should be taken in part payment of the £7,000, & to that extent he revoked the legacy. It was admitted that J. had not repaid the £5,000, but the legatees disputed the fact that testator had paid so much as £5,000 for J.:—Held: the legacy must be reduced only by the amount remaining unrepaid of sums advanced by testator for J., & an account must be directed.—Re TAYLOR'S ESTATE, TOMLIN v. UNDERHAY (1882), 22 Ch. 10749. .]—Erroneous recital cases may be divided into two classes. In class (a) testator by apt words directs a legatee to bring a particular sum into hotchpot. He may recite erroneously that a particular sum has been advanced, & direct the legatee to bring that sum, or the sum "hereinbefore recited to have been advanced," into hotchpot, or he may by other appropriate language shew an intention that the legatee shall absolutely & in any event bring the sum mentioned into hotchpot, in other words, that the legatee shall only take upon the footing of bringing that particular sum into account, & only receiving the balance payable to him on that footing. In class (b) testator recites the debt owing from the legatee—again he may recite it erroneously, & then directs the debt, "or so much thereof as shall remain unpaid" at testator's death or the time of distribution, to be deducted & brought into account. In cases of this class testator really intends that there shall be brought into account the debt or balance thereof which is actually owing at the time of death or distribution (SWINFEN EADY, J.).—Re KELSEY, WOOLLEY v. KELSEY, KELSEY v. KELSEY, [1905] 2 Ch. 465; 74 L. C. Interest on Advances.

10750. Time of computation—General rule.]—The rules laid down in the authorities for working out the consequences of a common hotchpot clause are, that no interest is charged against an advanced child prior to testator's death; that where the period of distribution of testator's property is at testator's death interest is charged against an advanced child from the death & not from the subsequent date at which, in fact, the distribution takes place; that if the period of distribution is at the expiration of a period of accumulation or of a prior life estate, interest is charged, not from the death, but from the period of distribution; & that the effect of a charge upon the residue, such as a life annuity secured by a fund set apart to meet it, does not alter the period of distribution. Testator, who was twice married & had executed a settlement on each occasion, died in 1866, having by his will & codicil bequeathed an annuity in favour of his widow, who died in 1910, during her life, & legacies in favour of certain children, & his residuary estate in favour of all his children, with special hotchpot provisions, according to the true construction of which the judge was of opinion that testator did not intend an equality by way of benefit, but an equality by way of portion between the children:—Held: the case was taken out of the general rule, & advanced children were not to be charged with interest between testator's death & the death of the widow when the annuity fund became divisible.—Re WILLOUGHBY, WILLOUGHBY v. DECIES, [1911] 2 Ch. 581; 80 L. 10753. —— ——.]—Testator by his will gave each of his sons in succession, according to seniority, the option of succeeding to his business, & declared that the son electing to do so should be debited with the value thereof in the division of his residuary estate, &, if the value should exceed the amount of such son's expectant share therein at the time the option was declared, he should refund the excess to testator's residuary estate. Then, after giving certain legacies to his other children, sons at twenty-five & daughters at twenty-one or marriage, which were to carry interest from his death applicable for maintenance, the testator gave his residuary estate upon trusts for sale, conversion, & investment & payment of certain annuities & directed the trustees to accumulate the surplus income at compound interest for twenty-one years from his death, if any child of his should so long live & be under twenty-one & on the attainment of twenty-one by his youngest living child, which was to be the period of distribution, to hold the trust fund in trust for his children then living as tenants in common. The will also empowered the trustees, at any time before the period of distribution, to make advances out of the capital of the trust premises in favour of any of his sons, the sums so advanced to be taken in part satisfaction of the shares in the trust premises to which the sons advanced should become entitled. Testator died in 1883 leaving three sons & two daughters. The eldest son in 1884 elected to succeed to the business, the value of which £15,000, did not at the time exceed the amount of his expectant share. The youngest child attained twenty-one in 1894; & meanwhile the second son had under the powers of advancement, received sums amounting to £8,200:—Held: (1) in debiting the eldest son with the value of the business taken by him, he ought not to be debited with interest thereon from the time he took it, but only from the period of distribution; (2) as to the sums advanced to the second son no interest ought to be charged thereon prior to the period of distribution.—Re DALLMEYER, DALLMEYER v. DALLMEYER, [1896] 1 Ch. 372; 65 L. The exor. absconded with the personal estate in his hands, but after many years a considerable part of it was recovered:—Held: the amount recovered must be treated as consisting of a principal sum, with interest thereon at £4 per cent. per annum from testator's death; the devisees of the real estates must bring into account their estimated values as part of the principal; & the shares of principal having been thus ascertained, the part apportioned as interest must be divided between them in proportion as those shares.—ACKROYD v. ACKROYD (1874), L. 10758. ——.]—W. had three sons, H., S., & B. On the marriage of H. in 1866, W. conveyed upon the trusts of H.'s marriage settlement real estate of the value of £4,000, & by the settlement convenanted to pay £6,000 to the settlement trustees within six calendar months after the death of the covenantor. H. died before W. W. died in June, 1893, having by his will, after giving certain legacies, &, to his wife, an annuity, given his residuary estate to trustees upon trust, as to one-third, for S., & as to another one-third for B. The remaining one-third was directed to be transferred to the trustees of H.'s settlement to be held upon the trusts thereof, but subject to the proviso that after payment of the £6,000 the sum of £10,000, the £6,000 plus the £4,000, should be considered to have been received & advanced out of residue in respect of H.'s portion, & should, for the purpose only of ascertaining the amount of that portion, be considered as part thereof, & should be accounted for in the way of hotchpot accordingly. On Dec. 6, 1893, the trustees of the will paid the £6,000 to the settlement trustees. B. died in Aug. 1893, & under his will his widow was tenant for life. The trustees of W.'s will made payments of equal amounts from time to time to S. & to B. & the trustees of his will. Part of each sum was treated as capital, & the rest, of which half was paid to B.'s widow, as income. On the death of W.'s widow in 1902 the sum set apart to answer her annuity fell into residue: (1) that the date of distribution, notwithstanding the existence of the annuity, was the death of W., & interest was chargeable on the advance made in his lifetime as from the date of his death & on advances made after his death, as from the date of those advances; (2) no distinction was to be made between the advances made on account of capital & those made on account of income in respect of the shares of S. & B.; (3) the rate of interest to be charged was 3 per cent. only.—Re WHITEFORD, INGLIS v. WHITEFORD, [1903] 1 Ch. 889; 72 L. 10761. Mode of computation—Interests in capital.]—Testator who had been extensively engaged in business, after directing that his trustees should carry on his business for a period not longer than till his youngest child should attain twenty-one, & should then sell his business if it were not previously sold, & directing the sale & conversion & investment of his estate & giving an annuity to his wife, empowered his trustees to apply "the whole or so much as they shall think fit of the annual income as a common fund for the maintenance, education, & bringing up, or otherwise for the benefit of my several children till the youngest shall attain twenty-one, in such manner as my said trustees or trustee shall judge expedient, accumulating the surplus income in aid of the common fund, & the income & accumulation shall follow the destination of the capital whence the same shall have arisen." The capital of the estate was directed to be divided equally amongst all the children who attained twenty-one, or being daughters married under that age, except one son, for whom a different provision was made. By a codicil testator recited that he had made advances to some of his children, & directed that all advances should be brought into hotchpot. The youngest child had recently attained twenty-one, & the trustees having since testator's death applied portions of the income for the maintenance & benefit of the children, & accumulated the rest: —Held: the proper mode of distribution was to divide the whole accumulated fund equally among the children, they giving credit for sums allowed for maintenance with interest & for interest from testator's death on advances made by him, the capital of the advances being to be brought into hotchpot on the division of the capital of the estate.—HILTON v. HILTON (1872), L. 10763. —— —— ——.]—Testator who died in 1878 bequeathed £30,000 with interest at 4 per cent. on trust for his widow for life, & after her death for division into four equal parts & payment of one part to his son, the remaining three-fourths to fall into residue. He declared that any sum which he should advance or covenant to advance to any of his children should be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the advanced child's provision, & this provision was to apply expressly to a sum of £6,000 which he had covenanted to advance to the trustees of one of his daughters' marriage settlements. He gave his real estate & his residuary personal estate to his trustees on trust to sell & convert & out of the proceeds to pay his debts & legacies, & to divide the residue into three equal shares, one of such shares for each of his three daughters for life, & after her death for her issue. His estate consisted chiefly of land, of which the trustees in exercise of their discretion under the will postponed the sale. They raised upon mtge. a sum sufficient to pay the debts, including the £6,000 which they paid to the daughter's trustees; but the £30,000 was not so raised. The rents of the real estate after providing for the interest on the £30,000 & on the mtge. produced a surplus income of about £200 a year, which was paid in equal shares to the two unadvanced daughters. The widow died in 1895: —Held: upon the division of the residue, the period of distribution was the death of testator; the advanced daughter, besides bringing into hotchpot the £6,000 must be charged with interest thereon as from the date of the advance; but the rate of interest ought to be 3 & not 4 per cent. —Re LAMBERT, MIDDLETON v. MOORE, [1897] 2 Ch. 169; *sub nom. 10766. —— —— ——.]—Testator by his will made in 1892 appointed his wife & his sons J. & A. exors. & trustees, & after certain specific legacies, including a trust legacy to his trustees, he made a general devise & bequest to his trustees upon trust to sell & convert as & when they should think expedient, & provided that the income of his estate should be treated like the income of the investments which would arise from the proceeds of sale until conversion. Then he provided for four sums of £6,000 for each of his daughters, & for the settlement of the legacy of the daughter, who was then unmarried, the other three sums being given to the trustees of the married daughters' settlement. He declared that the will was made on the assumption that the residuary real & personal estate disposed of thereby, including the money to the income of which his wife was entitled under the trusts of the settlement executed on their marriage & the sums of £5,000 & £2,300 or thereabouts which he had paid on account of his son J., which sums were to be deducted from the share of his residuary estate thereinafter given in trust for the benefit of the son's wife & family, after payment thereout of his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses, & the legacies thereby given other than legacies to his wife or any of his children, would amount to upwards of £60,000, & gave directions in case that assumption was not realised. Then the trustees were to stand possessed of the residue of his residuary estate after payment of the money before mentioned, "as to one-half on trust to pay, transfer, or invest same in the names of his wife & his son A. to be held upon trust to pay the annual income to M., the wife of J., for life for her separate use, & without power of anticipation," & after her decease upon trusts for their family. Then testator directed the general trustees of the will, who were different persons from the trustees of J.'s share, to hold the other moiety of the residue upon trusts in favour of A., & his wife & family. By another material clause, although it did not actually take effect, testator provided that if he should at any time thereafter give to any son or daughter any sum exceeding £1,000 at any one time, any sum so advanced should be considered as a payment by him on account of the sums thereinbefore bequeathed to or in trust for him or her, or his or her children, & that the amount so given, with interest from the date of the advance, should be brought into account & deducted from the sum thereinbefore bequeathed to him or her. Testator died in 1893 leaving his widow & several children of their marriage. A large part of the estate was not realised, & a number of investments were, down to 1910, appropriated to the two sons' settled shares, the appropriations to A.'s share exceeding those to J.'s share, the amount to be accounted for by the latter being thus reduced to £4,000. The income of the unappropriated estate was for a time applied on the principle of Re Hargreaves, Hargreaves v. Hargreaves, No. 10767, post, & afterwards on the principle of Re Poyser, Landon v. Poyser, No. 10768, post :—Held : the latter principle ought to have been acted on throughout, & the apportionment of capital as between the two shares should be made on a corresponding principle.—Re TOD, BRADSHAW v. TURNER, [1916] 1 Ch. 567 ; 85 L. 10767. —— Interests in intermediate income.]—Testator by his will & codicil, dated May 5, 1880, & July 12, 1882, respectively, after giving certain legacies, devised & bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay out of the income thereof the annual sum of £2,000 to his widow during her life, &, subject thereto, to divide the residuary estate into as many shares as there should be children living at his death, & to pay the annual income of such shares to his children ; & then upon trusts therein expressed. Testator provided that, as to certain advances already made to some of his children & as to any future advances to his children exceeding at any one time the sum of £1,000, these advances should be treated as capital of the original shares, & be brought into hotchpot & accounted for accordingly. Testator died on July 3, 1887, & left surviving him six children ; of whom three had received advances & three had not. The widow died in Mar. 1900 :—Held : for the purpose of ascertaining the proportions of the settled shares of the six children, the value of the net residuary estate of testator at the day of his death ought to be ascertained & there should be added thereto the several advances & the actual income received from testator's death ought to be divided in the respective proportions so ascertained, & the share of each child in such income ought to be debited with one-sixth part of testator's widow's annuity ; & any calculation of interest on the amount to any child was unnecessary.—Re HARGREAVES, HARGREAVES v. HARGREAVES (1903), 88 L. 10768. Whether interest on advances brought into account.]—Testator by his will gave his residuary real & personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell & convert & to divide the proceeds into fifteen equal shares, & to distribute them among his eight children as therein mentioned, the daughters' shares & portions of the sons' shares being settled. Testator declared that for the purpose of ascertaining the shares certain advances of varying amounts which he had made to some of his children & certain payments which he authorised his trustees to make after his death should, with interest at 4 per cent. in certain cases from the date of his death or from the date of payment, as the case might be, be debited against the shares of the children so advanced. He gave wide powers to his trustees to postpone the conversion of his estate, & directed that the actual intermediate income should be paid to the tenants for life. The estate of testator at his death in 1901 consisted largely of shares in cos., the dividends on which, as also the capital value, had been subject to great fluctuations :—Held : for the purpose of dividing the income pending the division of the capital of the estate interest at 4 per cent. ought, in cases where testator had directed that such interest should be debited, to be added to the actual income for the time being, & the aggregate so arrived at ought to be divided into fifteen shares & distributed among the children, subject in the case of each advanced child to a deduction of the interest on his advance or on the payment made to him.—Re POYSER, LANDON v. POYSER, [1908] 1 Ch. 828 ; 77 L. 10769. —— —— ——.]—Testator directed his trustees to pay the income of one moiety of his residuary estate to his widow reducible on her second marriage, &, subject thereto, directed them to stand possessed thereof upon trust for his children in the shares mentioned. The shares were settled with a protected life interest with remainders over. Testator directed that in computing the share of his eldest son, such son was to bring into hotchpot a sum of £2,250—as to which £1,700 had been paid by the testator & £550 was paid after his death by his exors. Under testator's guarantee of the son's banking account, & a similar direction was given as to £1,000 advanced to another son :—Held : for the purpose of ascertaining the proportions of the shares, the various sums paid by testator & his exors. to & for his two sons respectively ought to be added to the value of the moiety of testator's estate the income of which was not directed to be paid to his widow, & from the aggregate capital so ascertained the sums directed to be brought into account ought to be deducted from the shares of such two sons, & the income divided from testator's death in the proper proportions of the respective shares of capital so ascertained.—Re HART, HART v. ARNOLD (1912), 107 L. 10770. —— —— ——.]—Testator by his will devised & bequeathed his residuary real & personal estate to three trustees, two of whom were his sons, upon trust to sell & convert & to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust for all his children, except his son J., in equal shares, & he directed that all properties & investments acquired by him in the names of any of his children or advances to or for the benefit of his children should be treated as absolute gifts to such children of the properties, investments, & advances which might be taken in their names individually or given to or for their benefit, & that such children should not be liable to repay him or his estate the consideration which he had paid for the properties or the amounts that might have been advanced or invested on such securities or otherwise. He further directed that in the division of his estate his trustees should equalise his children's shares as far as possible by treating all gifts to them as having been made in satisfaction or part satisfaction of their shares. Testator then settled the shares of his daughters, & declared that his trustees might postpone the sale & conversion of his real & personal estate for so long as they should think fit, the income of the unconverted property to go to the persons to whom the income produced by the sale & conversion would for the time being be payable if the sale & conversion had been actually made. The investment clause did not authorise the investment in the shares of private cos. Testator died in Dec. 1892, leaving six children other than J., who took no interest in the residue, namely, two sons & four daughters. A considerable part of testator's estate consisted of shares in a private co. called Cravens, Ltd., the articles of which contained restrictive provisions with reference to the transfer of shares. There was no market for these shares, & the trustees although they had advertised, had been unable to obtain an offer for them. During his lifetime testator had made advances to certain of his children, & subsequently to his death & the trustees had made further advances to two of his sons. The trustees had for the purpose of dividing the income, pending the distribution of the estate, added to the income of the actual estate interest at 4 per cent. per annum on the advances to his childrem & had then divided the total thus ascertained into six equal shares, & had paid one of such shares to each of the children, deducting in the case of an advanced child 4 per cent. on the amount of the advances to that child :—Held : having regard to the difficulty of realising the Craven shares the principal adopted by the trustees with regard to the advances made both before & after the death of testator was the correct one.—Re CRAVEN, WATSON v. CRAVEN, [1914] 1 Ch. 358 ; 83 L. 10771. —— —— ——.]—Testator gave his wife the personal use & occupation during widowhood of a certain house which, subject thereto, was to form part of his devised real estate. He made a general residuary gift of all his real & personal estate to trustee, upon trust for sale, conversion, & investment, but with full powers of postponement & retention, & declared that the resulting trust fund should be held on trust, in the first place, out of the income thereof, to pay to his wife during widowhood such a sum as, together with the income under her marriage settlement, would make up the yearly sum of £2,000, & he provided that if the income of the trust fund should not in any year be sufficient to make up the £2,000, the whole of the income in that year should be paid to her, & any deficiency should be made up when the subsequent income of the trust fund would permit. The trustees were, after providing for an annuity which failed, to appropriate £4,000 on trusts for the benefit of a son P., &, subject as aforesaid, testator directed that the capital & interest of the trust fund should be held in trust for such of his sons W., E., & J. & his daughters I. & D. as being sons should attain twenty-one as being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, & so that the share of a son should be double that of a daughter. Testator gave power to the trustees, but only with the widow's consent during widowhood, to advance a certain proportion of the share of any of the children, & then settled the share of each daughter, less any sum advanced, on trust for her for life, & after her death for her children, with an ultimate trust on failure of children for her brothers equally. By a codicil, he increased the widow's annuity to £3,000, by another codicil after reciting that on the marriage of his daughter I. he had covenanted with her settlement trustees that his exors. or administrators would after his death pay such trustees £7,200, with 4 per cent. interest as from his death, to be held on the trusts of the settlement, testator declared that the £7,200, should be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of the daughter & her issue under the will & should be brought into hotchpot & accounted for accordingly. By still another codicil testator provided that, if D. should marry during the wife's widowhood, the trustees might settle on her marriage a sum equal to that settled on I., which equal sum should then cease to be subject to the widow's annuity & the other will trusts, but should be taken in or towards satisfaction, & the like as in the case of I. On testator's death his exors. paid the £7,200 to I.'s settlement trustees, & as from his death she received the income of that fund. On the marriage, after testator's death, of D., the will trustees transferred £7,200, to her settlement trustees free from the widow's annuity, & D. thenceforth enjoyed the income of that sum. The value of testator's estate at his death was about £80,000, & the income, even after the subtraction of both sums of £7,200 was sufficient to provide for the widow's annuity & interest on the £4,000 trust legacy. The trustees dealt with the income & kept the accounts on the basis of Re Hargreaves, Hargreaves v. Hargreaves, No. 10767, ante, & no income was paid to I. from testator's death or to D. from the date of her marriage, & there was an accumulated deficiency in respect of each of their shares. After appropriation of all charges on the income of the residue as from testator's death to the widow's death, as between the several shares thereof, the shares of I. & D. in such income were insufficient to meet the shares of the charges so appropriated thereto respectively : —Held : the period of distribution was the death of the widow, & I. & D. were not chargeable with the deficiencies down to the widow's death, but were entitled as from that date to the full income of their shares in the residuary estate after bringing the sums settled on them into hotchpot at that date.—Re FORSTER-BROWN, BARRY v. FORSTER-BROWN, [1914] 2 Ch. 584 ; 84 L. He gave his residuary real & personal estate to trustees on trust for sale & investment, & directed them to hold the residuary trust funds in trust to pay the annuities, & subject thereto as to five-sixteenth parts upon trust to invest same & pay the income to his son S. during his life, with remainder to his children ; & testator declared that certain advances made to his son should not be treated as a debt owing to testator, but should be brought into account by way of hotchpot in the division of testator's residuary estate; & testator directed the trustees to hold the remaining sixteen shares upon trusts in favour of other persons & their children, & empowered his trustees to postpone sale & conversion, & directed the income of the unconverted property, including the profits from his business, to be applied from the date of his death in the same way as the income would have been applicable if such property had been converted & the proceeds invested; & he especially directed his trustees to continue to hold as long as they should think fit his shares in certain cos., whether authorised or not under the investment clause contained in his will, without being responsible for any loss. Testator's estate consisted largely of shares in these cos., in which there was no free market & which were incapable of any accurate valuation. The average rate of interest earned by the estate since testator's death exceeded 9 per cent.:—Held: the case was not one for an immediate valuation of the residuary estate & pending the final division of the estate the advanced son ought to be charged with interest on the amount of his advance at the rate of 4 per cent.—Re COOKE, RANDALL v. COOKE, [1916] 1 Ch. 480; 85 L. 10774. —— —— Deduction of income tax.]—Under the will of testator who died in 1894 his residuary estate, other than a large holding in a private limited co. was held by his trustees upon trust for conversion, with a power to postpone, & the annual rents & profits pending conversion were to be deemed income. The ultimate beneficiaries were two sons & two daughters, the shares of the latter being settled. Pursuant to testator's will, as construed by an order of the judge, made in 1895, shares of this co. of the value of £12,029 at testator's death were transferred by the trustees of the will to each of testator's sons, to be enjoyed by them as from the date of testator's death, but subject to their bringing same into hotchpot. The order further declared that if the sons should receive more in the first instance than the daughters, the latter should have such excess made up to them with interest at 4 per cent. per annum from testator's death at the ultimate distribution. The bulk of the estate was freehold & remained unconverted. The trustees had dealt with the annual net income of the estate after paying all outgoings & deducting income tax, by adding two sums of £481 3*s.* 4*d.* being 4 per cent. interest on the two sums of £12,029, & of the total so arrived at one-fourth had been paid or accounted for to each of the daughters, & one-fourth, less £481 3*s.* 4*d.* to each of the sons. No income tax had been deducted from the two amounts for interest thus brought in for the purposes of computation:—Held: this was hotchpotting "like with unlike" & did not produce equality; the income of that estate to be brought in as the first item in the computation should be the gross income, before deduction of income tax, & the sums added by way of interest on over payments should also be brought in at the gross amounts, & when the distributive shares were ascertained, income tax should be deducted from each.—Re FOSTER, HUNT v. FOSTER, [1920] 1 Ch. 391; 89 L. 10776. —— Settled funds to be brought into hotchpot.]—Testator who died in 1914 had in his lifetime settled certain stocks on two of his daughters & their children, & these stocks had depreciated in value at the time of his death. By his will he gave his residuary estate in trust for all of his children equally, subject to a proviso that for the purposes of division there should be brought into hotchpot, in respect of each of the two daughters or her children, the value of the trust funds which he had settled upon them. It was conceded that, under the Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 2 (1) (c) & s. 9 (1), the estate duty payable in respect of the portion of the settled funds which were settled within three years of testator's death must be borne by those funds:—Held: the sum to be brought into account under the hotchpot clause in respect of all the settled funds was the value of all the settled funds at the date of settlement, & not at the date of the will, less the estate duty payable in respect of the funds settled within three years of testator's death.—Re CROCKER, CROCKER v. CROCKER, [1916] 1 Ch. 25; 85 L. If an estate be given to the heir-at-law expressly after the death of A., A. takes an estate for life by implication (BAYLEY, J.).—DOE d. DRIVER v. BOWLING (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 722; 1 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 367; 106 E. R. 1355.

10813. —— ——.]—Testator bequeathed life annuities payable from his death, & he directed a fund to be set apart to secure them. He also gave one-half of the residue of his personal estate to his widow absolutely, & the other half to other parties for life, with remainders over. By a codicil he postponed the payment of the annuities until the death of the wife:—Held: she did not, by implication, take the intermediate dividends of the fund set apart to answer the annuities.

Generally speaking it is undoubtedly true, that an estate or a bequest given to a person, after the death of another particular person, gives that particular person, after whose death the gift is to take effect, an estate by implication in all those cases, where, by law, & but for the postponement of the gift, the person in whose favour the gift is made would have taken some interest in the gift itself. Such as, for instance, if a man devises an estate to his heir-at-law, after the death of A.; that is a case in which the implication is supposed to arise, because, undoubtedly, if the heir were not disinherited during that time, he could not be postponed until after the death of another person; it is therefore assumed, that that person was meant to take an interest in the estate (ROMILLY, M.R.).—CRANLEY v. DIXON (1857), 23 Beav. 512; 26 L. 10814. —— ——.]—Testator made a minutely specific provision for his wife for life; & then directed that all his property at her death should be sold & divided between his children nominatim, "or such of them as shall be living at my decease, & the issue of such of them as shall have died in my lifetime or the lifetime of my wife":—Held: in a fund not described, part of testator's estate, the widow did not take a life estate by implication.

Assuming this to be a residuary gift from the decease of the wife, the question arises, whether the effect of the bequest is to give her a life estate by implication, or whether the interest during her life is undisposed of & goes as in cases of intestacy. The general rule applicable to the subject can hardly be questioned. If a person devise real estate to B. in fee, after the death of A., no interest being given to A. & B. being a stranger, the effect is not to give A. a life estate by implication; & the same rule applies whether it is a particular real estate or a residuary gift of realty. So if testator gives personal estate to a stranger after the death of A., no interest being given to A., the effect is not to give a life estate by implication to A. & the same effect follows, whether it is a particular or specific legacy or a share of the residuary personal estate. But to this general rule an exception has been introduced in a particular state of circumstances. If there is a devise of real estate to B. after the death of A., & B. is testator's heir, it is now settled that A. takes a life estate by implication, on this ground, that by devising to the heir after the death of A., testator has impliedly manifested an intention that the heir is not to take till the death of A., & that, therefore, testator must have intended A. to have the estate during his life. The same principle has been extended to the case of personalty; & it may be considered as now settled, that if there is a bequest of personalty, whether of a particular portion or the whole residue, after the death of A. to the person or persons who is or are the next of kin of testator, A. takes a life estate by implication, upon a ground similar to that which applies in the case of real estate. Of course, in the case of such a devise of a particular real estate, or in the case of such a bequest of a particular portion of the personal estate, it is assumed that the will contains no immediate residuary devise or residuary bequest; for if there be such residuary devise or bequest, the interest during the life of A. would pass thereby, & there would be no reason to imply a life estate in A. In the present case, the persons who are to take the whole estate after the death of the widow are not necessarily testator's next of kin ; it might happen that not one of those who were the next of kin at the date of the will would take under the general bequest, & therefore there is no ground for implying a life estate in the widow (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—STEVENS v. HALE (1862), 2 Drew. & Sm. 22 ; 6 L. Testator declared that it should not be incumbent on his exors. to pay the legacies sooner than two years after his decease, not to divide the residue amongst his relatives until two years after the death of his wife, & made provision for payment of an annuity of £700 to which his wife was entitled under her marriage settlement. 10839. Property left to disposal of testator's wife.]—Testator gave to his wife all his plate, etc., & all his goods & chattels, except as thereinafter bequeathed; & further he gave her all his pay from the East India Co. & balances at his bankers; & as for & concerning the property that was or might be invested in the British or foreign funds, or in bonds or securities of any description, he willed that the property might be vested in such manner as his wife, with the advice of his exors., might consider most secure & least liable to fluctuation or risk; & further, that the principal sum of £3,000 sterling should be at the will & disposal of his wife, at the time of her death, to whomsoever she will, but the residue of the property, over & above the £3,000 he willed that his wife should distribute to his relations, whose relative claims she was fully acquainted with. The property consisted of Greek bonds, etc., & English 3 per cent. Reduced Annuities, etc.; & there were also certain canal shares:—Held: the period of distribution among the relatives of testator was at the death of the wife, & consequently the wife took a life interest in the whole of the British or foreign funds, etc., either by implication or as residuary legatee, & nothing passed to the next of kin.—HUDLESTON v. GOULDSBURY (1847), 10 Beav. 547; 9 L. 10862. ——.]—Testator bequeathed leaseholds to a trustee upon trust to give yearly equal portions of the rents to the two brothers & three sisters of testator; that was to say, each to receive one-fifth part of the nett proceeds of rent, & he directed that, on the decease of any or all of his brothers & sisters, "the same should go to their children":—Held: the brothers & sisters of testator took life interests only.—Re HOUGHTON, HOUGHTON v. BROWN (1884), 53 L. J. Ch. 1018; 50 L. T. 529.

10863. ——.]—Testator, by his will, dated in 1894, devised certain real estate to his two sons in strict settlement, & also gave them certain personal estate. He gave the residue of his real & personal estate to his wife absolutely, & appointed her extrix. during her life & his sons exors. on her death. By a codicil in 1898, he revoked his will & gave all his property to his wife, "so that she may have full possession of it & entire power & control over it, to deal with it or act with regard to it as she may think proper." In the event, however, of her not surviving him, or dying "without having devised or appointed" the whole or any part of the said property, then he declared that his said will should take effect as if his codicil had not been made & he appointed his wife extrix. of his codicil during her life:—Held: the wife took an estate for life only with a general power of appointment.

It is to be observed that there are no words of limitation in this gift to the wife. It is wholly indefinite. There is no expression of any intention that she should take absolutely or for her own use & benefit; nor, on the other hand, are there any words limiting the gift to a life interest or otherwise. It cannot be doubted, however, that if the codicil had now gone on to dispose of the property after the death of testator's wife, or to prescribe in any manner how it was to go upon her decease, she would have taken only a life interest (JOYCE, J.).—Re SANFORD, SANFORD v. SANFORD, [1901] 1 Ch. 939; 70 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—IMPLICATION OF ABSOLUTE GIFT.

A. In General.

10864. Clear intention of testator.]—Testator gave to his sons H. & J. £16,000 upon special trust & confidence to invest & to pay the income of £8,000 part thereof to his daughter A. for life for her separate use, & after her death to divide the £8,000 amongst her children at twenty-one years of age. He then directed that H. & J. should pay the income of the remaining £8,000 to his daughter S. for life in the same manner in every respect, & subject to the same control as he had directed as to his daughter A., it being his intention that his daughters' fortunes should not be subject to the debts of their husbands. He then gave to H. & J. a sum of £6,000, to invest & pay the income to his son S., & to divide the principal amongst his children. The sums were charged on real estate. There was power to apply the income for the maintenance & education of the daughters' & sons' children. The daughter S. died, leaving four children who had attained the age of twenty-one. The fund representing the £8,000 had been paid into ct.:—Held: by implication the four children were entitled to the fund.

It is impossible upon a fair construction of the will to exclude the children of S. from having the benefit of this fund. It is in my opinion as clear an implication as can exist in any case (HALL, V.-C.).—SWEETING v. PRIDEAUX (1876), 2 Ch. D. 413; 45 L. J. Ch. 378; 34 L. T. 240, 24 W. R. 776.

10868. Implication from gift to other donee—Amounting to implied absolute gift.]—Testator, by will made in 1809, after giving all his " lands, tenements, chattels, & premises whatsoever " to his wife during her life, gave & bequeathed at her death certain messuages " to his son W., he paying to certain legatees the sum of £50 each, out of the aforesaid premises." By another devise he " gave to his son J. certain other messuages at the decease of his wife." The residuary clause was as follows : " All the rest & residue of my estate of whatever nature, kind & quality soever the same may be & not herein disposed of, after, payment of my debts, etc., first I give to my grandson the sum of £5, lastly I give & bequeath unto my four daughters equal share & share alike of the said residue & remainder & to be paid to them one year after the death of my wife :—Held : the devise to J. was not enlarged to a devise in fee by implication from the prior devise to W., which was accompanied with a charge, & J. took an estate for life only.—MORRIS v. LLOYD (1864), 3 H. & C. 141 ; 4 New Rep. 153 ; 33 L. J. Ex. 202 ; 10 L. T. 508.

10869. Prohibition of alienation.]—Where a will prohibits a legatee from alienating the property bequeathed, the presumption is that the intention was to make him absolute owner, but this presumption may be rebutted by indications in the will of a different intention on the part of testator.

A husband & wife made a joint will which contained a provision that should the wife survive the husband, as in fact happened, certain lands & houses, including the property in dispute in this action " shall be vested in me testatrix subject to the undermentioned conditions." The will continued : " Our exors. shall not sell or otherwise alienate " certain properties, including the property in dispute, " nor shall I testatrix have power to sell or otherwise alienate the same or any of them, but I shall have a life interest therein." Under a heading " Inheritance upon the death of both of us " : testators directed that the property in question should " vest in E." E. was a son of testator & testatrix, & died in the lifetime of testatrix intestate & without issue. Another clause of the will instituted him as one of the heirs of the residue :—Held : testatrix had only a life interest in the property, & E. had a vested interest subject to her life interest.—SAMARADIWAKARA v. DE SARAM, [1911] A. C. 753 ; 81 L. J. P. C. 75 ; 105 L. T. 345, P. C.

3. Implication from Gift Over.

(a) In General.

10870. Gift over not corresponding with period of suspense.]—Testator directed that his trustees should hold certain personal property in trust for his daughter S., until his granddaughter M. should attain twenty-one, or marry under that age with the consent of her guardians ; & when his granddaughter should attain twenty-one, or before upon her marriage with such consent, upon trust to pay the income to his granddaughter for her life for her separate use ; & in case of her marriage with such consent, but not otherwise, the property was to be settled on her for her life for her separate use with remainder to her children, & in default of issue, to be at her absolute disposal. Testator gave other property on like trusts for his other granddaughters, & referred to the property as the " provisions " & the " portions " of his granddaughters. Then followed a gift over on the death of any granddaughter under twenty-one, & without having been married, upon trust for the others in like manner as their original portions ; & if all should die under twenty-one, & without having been married, then the shares were to fall into the residue. Two of the granddaughters attained twenty-one, but were still unmarried :—Held : there was no absolute interest given by implication to the granddaughters on their attaining twenty-one without being married ; but they had only an estate for life, subject to any question which might arise in case either of them married.—SAVAGE v. TYERS (1872), 7 Ch. 10875. Realty & personalty given over together.]—Testator by his will devises all his real estate to his exors. for the purposes thereinafter stated ; &, after empowering them either to continue his business or to dispose of it, he gives the profits of it in the one case, & the interest of the moneys arising from the sale in the other, & also the interest of the securities on which the rest of his capital should be invested, to his daughter for life, her receipt to be a discharge. He then gives her the rents & profits of all his real estates during her life ; & at her decease he devises & bequeaths to her heirs all his estates real & personal as tenants in common : if his daughter has but one child, such child is to possess the whole ; but if she should die without issue, then at her decease he gives certain legacies. He next directs all his goods & effects to be sold, his legacies to be paid, & a sum invested sufficient to purchase £150 a year, which is to be paid to the husband of the daughter. He then orders his real estates to be sold at the decease of his daughter or at the decease of his brothers & sisters, according as a particular event may turn out ; & he gives over to 10877. ——.]—Testator, by will made in 1820, devised & bequeathed freeholds & leaseholds together to his daughter S. for life, remainder to her first & other sons successively in tail, remainder to her daughters as tenants in common in tail, & "in case of default of issue" of S., to "the right heirs" of S. "for ever." S. having married & died a widow, without having had a child:—Held: she took an absolute interest in the leaseholds.—COMFORT v. BROWN (1878), 10 Ch. D. 146; 48 L. J. Ch. 318; 27 W. R. 226.

10878. Gift over on determination or failure of trust.]—Testator devised real estate to trustees, upon trust, after life interests, to receive the rents during the minority of A., & apply them for his maintenance & education, & accumulate the residue, & to convey the property to A., his heirs & assigns, so soon as he should have attained twenty-one; & he also devised a rentcharge, upon trusts for the benefit of B., his heirs & assigns, declared by reference to the trusts in favour of A. The will contained a declaration, that in case the trusts should determine or become incapable of taking effect, the hereditaments should form part of the residue. B. survived testator, & died under twenty-one:—Held: he took an absolute estate in fee in the rentcharge.—Re MOTTRAM (1864), 10 L. T. 866; 10 Jur. N. S. 915.

10879. Gift over on death unmarried & without issue—Or on alienation.]—By an instrument in the form of a settlement, but proved as a will, real & personal estate was given to trustees upon trust for the sole use & benefit of resp., son of the settlor, his heirs, exors., & administrators, to be assigned & transferred to him as soon as conveniently might be after the settlor's death, subject to a proviso, that if the respondent should die unmarried & without issue his share should go over, & also that the property assigned in trust for resp. was to be held by the trustees upon the express condition that he should not during his life have power to mortgage, sell, alien, charge, or incumber any part of the property, & in that event the trustees should stand possessed of such property in trust for other persons:—Held: resp. took an absolute interest in fee simple under the instrument, & the condition of forfeiture in case of charge or alienation was therefore void as repugnant:—CORBETT v. CORBETT (1888), 14 P. 10880. Gift over on death or second marriage.]—Testator, after bequeathing a life estate to his widow, gave his residuary estate to his daughter, then a widow, but in case of her death or second marriage or cohabitation with any man, then over. The daughter survived the widow, & died without having married again or cohabited:—Held: the daughter did not take an absolute interest, but an interest determinable on the happening of any one of the three events.—JONES v. MORRIS (1922), 91 L. 10903. ——.]—Testator directed that, as his sons attained twenty-five, his exors. should pay them a share of his estate & effects, it being his will that his sons & daughters should receive equal shares of his estate. As his daughters attained twenty-five, the exors. were to invest £1,000 each for them for life, & the difference between this & their share paid to them. In case any daughter "should die without issue," the £1,000 was to be divided "amongst such of his children as might be then living, & the issue of such as might be dead, share & share alike," the issue to take the like share as the parent would, if living, have been entitled to:—Held: the gift over was on an indefinite failure of issue; there was an absolute gift of the £1,000 in the first instance to the daughters, which had not effectually been cut down, & the daughters were absolutely entitled to the £1,000.—WEBSTER v. PARR (1858), 26 Beav. 236; 53 E. 10904. ——.]—Testator gave the interest of all his money in the funds to his daughter C., & he desired his outstanding money to be put into the funds. He then desired the interest of the moneys directed to be put into the funds to be paid to his daughter C., "as & for her own & issue's proper moneys." But in the event of her dying without issue, he desired the whole of his funded property to be divided between his brothers & sisters & their children. C. died without issue:—Held: she took the funds absolutely, & the gift over was inoperative.—Re ANDREW'S WILL (1859), 27 Beav. 608; 1 L. T. 319; 5 Jur. N. S. 114; 54 E. R. 241.

10905. ——.]—Testator, by will made in 1821, after a gift of leaseholds to his daughter E., gave all the remainder of his property whatsoever to his wife D., the income to her for life, & at her death unto E., for her own benefit & her children, or one only child if she should have any, all that was given to E. being for her own benefit, & not to be subject to the debts, control, or disposition of any husband she might marry; but if E. should die without issue, the leaseholds were to be enjoyed by D. for life, & at her death to his sister S. for her life, & at her death, together with all that was left to D. for her life, to be equally divided between all the grandchildren of S. E. died without having had a child:—Held: E. was entitled absolutely both to the leasehold specifically bequeathed to her & to the residue given subject to D.'s life interest.—FISHER v. WEBSTER (1872), L. 10906. ——.]—Testator, in 1846, gave his residuary real & personal estate to J. S. L. & the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten for ever; but in case of his death without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to P. C. L. in the same manner; & if P. C. L. should die without heirs male of his body lawfully begot, then the property to go to J. S. A. in the same manner. By a codicil testator, after reciting that by his will he had directed that in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," the residue of testator's real & personal estates should go to P. C. L., revoked that bequest, & in the event of the death of J. S. L. "without leaving male issue him surviving," gave the residuary estate to the eldest daughter, if any, of J. S. L.:—Held: Wills Act, 1837 (c. 26), s. 29, did not apply, & the gifts over to P. C. L. & J. S. A. were void as to the personalty, as being on an indefinite failure of heirs male, & the codicil did not alter their effect, & under the will & codicil J. S. L. took an absolute interest in the personalty, subject only to an executory gift over in favour of his eldest daughter if he died leaving no male issue surviving him.—DAWSON v. SMALL (1874), 9 Ch. 10907. —— .]—Testator, by will of Apr. 1811, devised certain hereditaments to his granddaughter E. C. & her heirs. But if E. C. died without leaving lawful issue living at her death, testator devised the hereditaments "unto & to the use of the nine children of J. A., to be equally divided among them share & share alike." He devised all the residue of his estate to his son P. C.—E. C. died, leaving no issue living at her death. One of the nine children of J. A. survived E. C.:—Held: this executory devise affected the previous estate in fee given to E. C. to the extent of such life estates only, & subject to the life estates, the property remained in E. 10955. .]—Testator by his will, dated in 1819, devised his freehold estate as follows:—"To my daughter Henrietta I bequeath the house I live in, being No. 11," etc.; "to my daughter Martha I bequeath my house No. 10," etc.; "but it is my will that the same be placed in trust, & that they shall only receive the rent during their life." In case of Henrietta's death without leaving behind her more than one child, then the said house No. 11 shall revert to my son David, son John, & daughter Martha, in equal shares; but if she leaves more than one, be it one, two or more, they shall share alike the said property left to their mother: but suppose that none of them live to twenty-one years of age, the said property shall revert to David, John, & Martha, as before mentioned." Henrietta survived testator, & died, leaving two children, of whom one lived to attain the age of twenty-one years, & the other died under that age:—Held: the two children of Henrietta took an estate in fee simple in possession in the house No. 11.—BURKE v. ANNIS (1853), 11 Hare, 232; 68 E. 10957. .]—A testator devised three freehold houses to trustees, in trust, as to the first two, to receive the rents & to pay the same to his wife during her life or widowhood, &, after her decease or second marriage, as to the first, "upon trust to convey & assign the same to his daughter E., her heirs & assigns for ever"; as to the second, in similar terms to his daughter C.; & as to the third, "upon trust to apply the rents for the advancement & benefit of my granddaughter M., until she attains the age of twenty-one years; but, in case my said granddaughter should die under that age, then I devise the said dwelling-house, etc., to my daughters E. & C., their heirs & assigns, as tenants in common." He afterwards appointed his son H. & his daughters M. C. & A. C. exor. & executrixes of his will, to whom he bequeathed all the residue of his real & personal estate not thereinbefore specifically bequeathed, & he declared that such residue should be subject to his debts, legacies, & funeral expenses, & to the payment of an annuity to S.:—Held: the trustees took a legal estate in fee in the three houses; & the granddaughter M. took an equitable estate in fee in the third house, subject to defeasance in the event of her dying under twenty-one.—CROPTON v. DAVIES (1869), L. 10964. ——.]—Testator gave the residue of his estate & effects to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to receive & take the rents & profits thereof for her life for the maintenance of herself & such children as he might have by her living at the time of his decease, till such child or children should respectively attain twenty-one subject to the legacies & proviso thereinafter expressed. Testator gave to each of his children £500 to be paid them after their respectively attaining twenty-one; but in case of the decease of his wife before they attained twenty-one then he directed his trustees to apply the interest of his estate & effects in their maintenance & education till they attained "that," & to be equally divided between them; but in case any of them should die under twenty-one the share of such child or children so dying to go & be equally divided among the survivors or survivor: "Provided that if his wife should marry again, then all his before-mentioned estate & effects should go & be equally divided among his children by her in equal portions." Testator's widow died without having married a second time:—Held: there was no intestacy, & on the death of testator's widow, the children became absolutely entitled to the residue of testator's estate in equal shares.—TUNALEY v. ROCH (1857), 3 Drew. 720; 29 L. She then "constituted & appointed" the exors., nominatim, trustees for the nieces & their children. All the children of a deceased niece had attained twenty-one:—Held: they were entitled absolutely to the moiety given to her for life.—WILKS v. WILLIAMS (1861), 2 John. & H. 125; 5 L. 10967. ——.]—Testator devised his copyhold mansion & estate to trustees, in trust, to permit his wife & two unmarried daughters to reside there during his wife's life, & after her death, to let & pay the rents of same to his three daughters, R., M. & H., share & share alike, during their respective lives; & empowered his trustees to sell the estate, during the life or lives of his daughters, with their consent, & to invest the proceeds of such sale, & to hold the dividends, interest, & income arising therefrom upon like trusts as before declared in favour of his three daughters, & directed that "in case my daughters shall depart this life leaving lawful issue, then my trustees, & the survivors or survivor of them, shall appropriate the share of such daughter or daughters to the maintenance & education of such child or children until the age or ages of twenty-one years, but it is my will, & I do direct that my copyhold estate, or the produce thereof, shall be divided amongst the whole of my grandchildren, share & share alike, in case there should be no lawful issue, but of one of my daughters, that is to say, the children of G., J. & F. with the child or children of only one of my daughters, share & share alike—& that my trustees, or the survivor or survivors of them, or the exors. or administrators of the survivor, shall then sell & dispose of my estate & property, if not before done, & the produce to be equally divided amongst such grandchildren, share & share alike, as they shall respectively attain to the age of twenty-one years, but should I have no grandchild, or not one shall attain the age of twenty-one years," then the estate was devised to K. in fee. Testator devised all the residue of his estate & effects whatsoever & wheresoever, to his wife "for her own use & benefit." The wife & daughters of testator survived him. H. died leaving children. M. died having had four children, all of whom predeceased her, but some of whom left children living at her death. R. died without ever having had any issue:—Held: upon the true construction of the will, there was a clear gift to the issue, in the widest sense of the word, of the three daughters, &, accordingly, the children & grandchildren of M. & H. took by implication equitable estates in fee, per capita, in the shares to which M. & H. respectively were entitled.—MITCHISON v. BUCKTON (1875), 32 L. 10986. -.]—Where land is devised to an unborn person for life with remainder to his children in tail to his sons in tail male, the ct. under the doctrine of cy-près will give legal effect to the general intention of testator by treating the life estate as an estate tail or an estate tail male, as the case may be; but, except in the case of an executory trust, in which a greater latitude is allowed in moulding the provisions of the will, the doctrine will only be applied in this manner; & the ct. will not construe a will cy-près if the result is to include as an object of testator's bounty any person whom he intended to exclude, or to exclude any person whom he intended to include. —Re MORTIMER, GRAY v. GRAY, [1905] 2 Ch. 502; 74 L. 10987. — — Whole context to be considered.]—Testator, in a very ungrammatical & obscure will, devised real & personal property so as to vest the whole legal interest in trustees, in trust for A. & B., during their lives, to their separate use: some unfinished & unconnected portions of sentences succeeded, & these were followed by a direction, that, after the decease of A. & B., & failure of their male issue, the property should go to the granddaughters: A. & B. had each only one child, a daughter, & both these daughters were mentioned in the will;—Held: upon the whole context of the will, A. & B. were only tenants for life, & an estate in tail male was not to be raised in them by implication.—HOUSTON v. HUGHES (1828), 5 Russ. 116; 38 E. R. 971, L. C.

10988. — — Devise to A. & his heirs—Charged with payment of annuity.]—A devise of land to A. & his heirs upon condition that he should grant an annual rent out of it to B. conveys an estate tail only & not an estate in fee.—DUTTON v. ENGRAM (1617), Cro. Jac. 427; 70 E. R. 365.

This was no estate tail in A. by implication.—BAMFIELD v. POPHAM (1703), 1 P. Wms. 54; Holt, K. B. 233; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 183, pl. 24; 24 E. 10990. -I think M. took no estate tail; it is given her expressly for life; & therefore no greater estate shall arise by implication, for though a devise "to A. & his children," or "to A. & after his death to his children," will give A. an estate tail if he has no children, according to Wild's Case, No. 8728, ante, yet in this case there are words of contingency, "if he have any children," which differs the case from Wild's Case, No. 8728, ante; & there does not appear to have been any intention which would be fulfilled by overruling the estate for life (LORD HARDWICKE, C.). —JONES v. LEGG (1743), 9 Mod. It is a clear rule, acted upon at least from Lord Vaughan's time, that where there is a devise to A. & his heirs for ever, & a subsequent devise to any person who by possibility may be his heir, the word "heirs" must be construed "heirs of the body," & A.'s estate reduced to an estate tail (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—DOE d. The testator directed, that if M. should, after the death of J. & R., & R.'s children, & his three sisters, die before N., leaving issue male, then his trustees should convey one moiety of his real estate to trustees, to the use of the first & other sons of M., successively, in tail male, with remainder to N. for life, with remainder to his sons in tall male; & he directed one moiety of his personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate to be settled to the same uses. Testator then gave corresponding directions with regard to the other moiety, in the event of N. dying before M. In case M. & N. should both die without issue male, then testator directed his trustees to convey his real estate to such persons as would be his right heirs at the death of the survivor of M. & N., & to transfer his personal estate to such persons as would be his next of kin. The testator's daughter R. & his three sisters, & M., all died without issue in the lifetime of his daughter J. common, charged nevertheless with payment of the legacy of £1,000 which I do in that case give & bequeath to E. daughter of the said M., the same to be paid to her at the end of twelve calendar months next after the said R. & M., their exors., administrators, or assigns, shall come into possession of the premises." Testatrix died on Sept. 7, 1798, leaving T. her heir-at-law, & he had several children, the eldest born before the date of the will, & the youngest after the death of testatrix. The eldest survived all the others, & died in 1805. On the death of testatrix, T. entered into possession of the devised lands, & so continued until his death on June 20, 1837, having in 1832 suffered a recovery of the lands to the use of himself in fee. E. died intestate in 1815, leaving M. her heir-at-law, who claimed against the devisee of T. two undivided third parts of the said lands, as having passed to her under the will on the death of T. :—Held : the words "in case T. shall happen to die without lawful issue," die not narrow the estate in fee simple, which the children would have taken under the former part of the devise, into an estate tail: therefore that T. took an estate tail, which was converted into a fee simple by the recovery; & not an estate for life, with remainder to his children in tail, with remainder to R. & M. in fee.—DOE d. 11029. ·.]—The thirteenth Viscount Mountgarret by his will devised his Irish estates upon trusts for his son H. for life, remainder for his, testator's, grandson S. for life, remainder for "his first & other sons in tail male for the respective terms of their respective lives successively & in remainder one after the other so that such only son as shall be entitled to & bear the title of Viscount Mountgarret shall be entitled to such rents & profits, & in default of such issue upon trust as hereinafter set out to the holder for the time being of the Mountgarret title & in the event of such title becoming extinct," then upon trust for testator's right heirs living at the death of the last holder of the title. The will contained a residuary devise. The Mountgarret title was created by King Edward VI., who conferred it upon R. & the heirs male of his body. Testator died in 1900 & H. became the fourteenth Viscount. He was twice married By his first marriage in 1868 he had one son only, namely, S.; & by his second marriage in 1902 he had one child only, pltf. H. died in 1912, & S. became the fifteenth Viscount & died without issue in 1918. On the death of S. pltf. became the sixteenth Viscount, & questions arose as to what interest he took under the will of the thirteenth Viscount in the Irish estates:—Held: (1) the true effect of the devise was to create estates in tail male & not merely life estates in the first & other sons successively of the fifteenth Viscount, & consequently the gift over in default of his male issue was not void for remoteness.

(2) The gift over in default of issue male of the fifteenth Viscount, upon its true construction & in the events that had happened, operated as a gift to pltf. & the heirs male of the body of the first Viscount, under which pltf., as heirs male of the first Viscount by lineal descent, took an estate in tail male descendible or transmissible not only to the heirs male of his body but also, on failure of such issue, to collateral relatives who were heirs male of the body by the first Viscount.—Re MOUNTGARRET, MOUNTGARRET v. INGILBY, [1919] 2 Ch. 294; 88 L. First, with respect to the estate taken by the heir-at-law, it must be premised, that, in order to ground the implication that he takes an estate tail, it must be held that there is a devise over to testator's granddaughter Mary. Supposing, then, that an unequivocal devise over to Mary is to be found in the expressions of this will, it appears to be sufficiently clear, from the authorities cited at the bar, that the heir-at-law would, by implication, take an estate tail (TINDAL, C.J.).—DOE d. 11105. —— ——.]—By a codicil testator devised freehold estate on trust for M., B., S. & J., for their respective lives, as tenants in common, & on the death of all or any of them, then as to the part of her or them so dying, in trust for all & every the child & children of them respectively, & the heirs of their bodies ; & if any of them should die without leaving issue living at her death, then in trust for the survivors & survivor of them & the heirs of her & their bodies, & if all except one should die without leaving lawful issue, then in trust for such only or surviving niece & the heirs of her body, & in case of a total failure of issue of them, then in trust for his heirs. B. died, having had four children, three of whom died infants & unmarried. J. died, having had three children, one of whom died an infant & unmarried. Then M. died, a spinster. S. was a spinster, & over sixty :—Held : (1) cross-remainders in tail were to be implied between the children of the tenants for life.

The true rule is laid down in Doe d. Gorges v. Webb, No. 11102, ante, that in order to ascertain whether you should imply cross-remainders you have to ascertain whether testator intended that the whole estate should go over together. If you once get to that point that he intends the whole estate to go over together you are not to let a portion of it descend to the heir-at-law in the meantime (JESSEL, M.R.).

(2) As I understand the rule of reading "survivor" "other," or rather of inferring or assuming that testator wrote "survivor" when he meant "other," it is this, that where there is a gift to several persons for life with remainders to their children or other issue with cross-remainders between the stocks, & you find that there is a gift over in case of one of the tenants for life dying without children or the other class of issue to their survivors & their children or issue, there you read "survivor" as "other," or suppose it was put for "other," because, if not, you would have the absurd result of testator's intending to benefit a class of tenants for life & their children or issue by stocks, & going on to deprive one or more of the stocks of their shares, because their parent who takes for life only is dead, & who, being dead, could in no event take any more. . . . Where on the other hand the gift to the survivors is not a gift to a survivor for a limited interest, with remainder to his children or issue in the shape of stocks, there is no reason for such an implication. The person takes absolutely, & the person to take absolutely would naturally take absolutely if he survived (JESSEL, M.R.)—MADEN v. TAYLOR (1876), 45 L. J. Ch. 569.

11107. —— Remainder in reversion.]—One devises his lands to his brother for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to the first & other sons of his brother in tail male successively, remainder to his brother's daughters in tail; remainder to his four sisters & a niece for their lives, share & share alike, as tenants in common, & not as joint tenants. Remainder to their sons successively in tail; remainder to their daughters in tail; reversion to his own right heirs; & then devises to another sister, only a small annuity. The four sisters & the niece take several estates for life, with several remainders to their sons & daughters respectively: & there are no cross-remainders.—PERY v. WHITE (1778), 2 Cowp. 777; 98 E. A. had three children born in the lifetime of testator, & living at his decease, & one born after testator's death. One of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A. without issue :—Held : cross-remainders were to be implied between the children of A., &, therefore, the three children of A. who survived or left issue took, according to their respective estates, the share of the child of A. who died without issue; & the inequality among the devisees, some of them being tenants in tail, & others tenants for life with remainder to their issue in tail, was no objection to the implication of cross-remainders among them.—VANDERPLANK v. KING (1843), 3 Hare, 1; 12 L. 11127. ——.]—Testator devised certain real estates to his four granddaughters, by name, for their respective lives, in equal shares, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, "with remainder in equal shares to the use of the children of my said four granddaughters, & the heirs of their bodies, such children of my said granddaughters taking their mother's share as tenants in common in tail, remainder to the survivors of such children, & in default of issue by my said granddaughters," then over. There was a devise of residuary real estate in similar terms, except that the remainder next following that to the children of the granddaughters as tenants in common in tail was thus expressed: "To the survivors or survivor of such children & the issue of their, his or her body in tail":—Held: under the words "in default of issue by my said granddaughters," the four granddaughters, & not their children, took by implication, subject to the prior limitations, estates tail in both classes of property, with cross-remainders between them in tail.—ATKINSON v. HOLTBY (1863), 10 H. In default of issue of the eldest sons, he devised the same share or shares to the second, third, & other sons, then living, of his said nephews severally & successively, according to their respective seniorities, & to their issue in tail male in the same manner & for the same estate & estates as he had before given to the eldest sons of such nephews. Failing the issue of the sons then living, he devised to all & every the sons of his nephews hereafter to be born in tail male. After which the will proceeded thus: "& for default of such issue, I give & devise the same to my own right heirs for ever, it being my will & intention that the said lands shall go & remain in my name & family for ever, or so long as the law will permit such enjoyment of the same":—Held: the clause in favour of the heirs general did not take effect so long as any issue of any of the devisees capable of taking as tenants in tail survived, & cross-remainders were to be implied in favour of surviving tenants in common.—HANNAFORD v. HANNAFORD (1871), L. 11130. ——.]—Then come the words introducing the ulterior limitations. The estate is to go over if testator leaves no issue, or if such child or children as he should leave, & the issue of such child or children, should die before attaining twenty-one or marriage. Those words seem to me to fit in with the direction to convey the fee to the tenants in tail in possession, on marrying, or attaining twenty-one. On either of these events occurring, the ulterior limitations are displaced, so far as regards the property to which the direction applies. Of course, you must imply cross-remainders, & then the scheme of the will is complete, & the property must either come to one or more of testator's descendants in absolute ownership, subject to the estate tail, or go over within a very limited period (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—VAN GRUTTEN v. FOXWELL, FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN, [1897] A. 11140. —— —— To fill up unintentional hiatus.]—(1) Where a will declared trusts of the income of property for a limited period, giving (as was held on the construction) successive life interests among certain children & their respective issue per stirpes, with cross-limitations among the stirpes, but no cross-limitation expressed between individuals of the same stirps, the latter cross-limitations were implied.

(2) Cross executory limitations of personal estate (a) are only implied to fill up a hiatus in the limitations which seems from the context to be unintentional; (b) cannot be implied to divest an interest given by the will; & (c) may be implied, notwithstanding the existence of expressed cross-limitations between other persons.

(3) It is possible to imply cross-limitations, notwithstanding the presence of expressed cross-limitations in some other event in favour of the very same persons; but the ct. weighs that circumstance in ascertaining the intention.—Re HUDSON, HUDSON v. HUDSON (1882), 20 Ch. 11160. Gift contingent on widowhood of named person.]—A testator, by his will gave the income of shares in a bank to E. a married woman, for life, provided she were a widow at the time of his death, or should become such afterwards, but during her widowhood only ; & gave the income, during the coverture of E. to P. He also gave P. £800, in case E. should become a widow, in lieu of the income of the shares. By a codicil, the testator revoked the gift of this income, & gave a portion of the income to E. for life, whether she were a widow at the time of his death or not, or became such afterwards or not. At the time of testator's death, E. was under coverture :—Held : P. was not entitled to the £800 at the death of testator, & would become entitled only in the event of E. becoming a widow. —MORRISON v. MORRISON (1843), 2 Y. & C. 11161. Separate gifts to widow & daughter—Gift over in default of issue of daughter to A. & B.—Right of each to participate in both sums.]—A testator directed his trustees to invest £1,400 for his widow for life, with remainder to his daughter for life, & £800 for his daughter for life. & after the death of his daughter, he gave the two sums to her children, & if she died unmarried, which happened, he gave the said principal sums of £1,400 & £800 in manner following :—£800, " part thereof," to A., " & the remainder of the said sums " to B. The daughter died in the life of the

To her son, A., she bequeathed her half of the homestead property charged with the comfortable maintenance of M. & E. upon such homestead during their lives :—Held : the maintenance of M. & E. under the terms of the will, was made a charge upon the property, & not upon A. personally.—MCKEEN v. MCKEEN, 33 N. 11162. Gift to A. subject to contingency of B. becoming of sound mind.]—A testator bequeathed his real & personal estate in trust to pay, for the benefit of his son, a lunatic, an annuity until he should be able to manage his affairs, & if he ever returned to a sound mind, then he directed he should " divide " his residuary estate with his sister. Testator then gave the whole residue, subject to the contingency of his son's becoming of sound mind, to his daughter for life, & afterwards as she should appoint :—Held : the daughter took the whole, subject to the annuity & to the contingency ; but if the son recovered his reason, he would be entitled not only to one-half of the capital but to one-half of the income from testator's death.—HOLE v. DAVIES (1865), 34 Beav. 345 ; 55 E. R. 668.

11163. Forfeiture clause — On beneficiary becoming entitled to " permanent income "—After acquired income passing under settlement to husband for life.]—Testator by will, in 1841, bequeathed a sum of stock on trust to pay the dividends of one-eighth part to each of his eight nephews & nieces ; the dispositions made to females being for their separate use. Testator further declared that if any of such nephews & nieces should " be in the receipt of or entitled to a permanent income of £1,000 a year," then his or her interest in the said sum of stock should cease. In 1856 one of the nieces, a married woman, became entitled to a share of personal estate amounting to £51,000 & upwards ; but on the marriage of this lady in 1827, a post-nuptial settlement had been executed, whereby, after reciting an agreement to that effect, the husband covenanted that in case any real or personal property should, during the coverture, descend to the wife, or she should become entitled to or possessed of the same by bequest, or by any means whatsoever in her own right, he would do all acts, etc. whereby the same should be assured & invested in the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement the first of which was a life estate to the husband :—Held : on the construction of the will & settlement, the wife had not become, in the year 1856, entitled, whilst her husband was living, " to or in receipt of a permanent income of £1,000 a year " ; & consequently, the provision in her favour contained in testator's will was not forfeited.—CURZON v. CURZON (1859), 1 Giff. 248 ; 34 L. PART XVII

... of Testator's Family Maintenance & Protection Acts—Jurisdiction of court — Testator domiciled in State — Assets in, & personalty outside state.]—Where a testator has died domiciled & possessed of assets in N. S. W. & of personalty outside the State, the ct. in making an order for maintenance under Testator's Family Maintenance & Guardianship of Infants Act, 1916, s. 3, has jurisdiction to deal with all his personalty wherever situated at the time of his death.—Re SELLAR, 25 S. R. N. S. W. 540 ; 42 N. S. W. W. N. 161.—AUS.

c. On what depending Materiality of domicil of deceased.]—Jurisdiction to allow maintenance under Testator's Family Maintenance Act, 1918, depends on whether the Supreme Ct. has granted probate of the will or letters of administration with the will annexed of the estate of deceased. The domicil of deceased at the time of his death is immaterial.—Re FOUND, FOUND v. SEMMENS, [1924] S. A. S. R. 236.—AUS.

d. —— ——.]—Where the ct. is of the opinion that a will does not make adequate provision for the proper maintenance of testator's widow, it has power under Testator's Family Maintenance Act, (B. C.), 1924, to order a different division of the estate, notwithstanding the fact that under the will the widow would have received as much as she would have been entitled to receive had testator died intestate.—Re SCHMALZ, [1927] 1 D. L. R. 1113 ; [1927] 1 W. W. R. 408 ; 38 B. C. R. 264.—CAN.

e. —— —— Gift to widow of " all my personal effects & money "—Intestacy as to realty—Jurisdiction to make order affecting whole estate.]—Testator died leaving a will in which he appointed his wife his extrix. & otherwise expressed his will concerning his estate : " I give & bequeath all my personal effects & money to my wife, J., & in the event of her death all to be equally divided between my two eldest sons . . ." At the time he made his will his estate consisted of money & personal property. Before his death, however, he had become possessor of a house & land, as to which he died intestate :—Held : there was no jurisdiction to make an order under Family Protection Act, 1908, s. 33, affecting the shares of the sons.—Re YUILL, YUILL v. TRIPE, [1925] N. Z. L. R. 196.—N.Z.

f. —— —— Testator resident in England at time will made & at date of death & for some years prior thereto—Property in New Zealand & in England.]—Testator, who was born in England, made his will & died in London, leaving considerable estate, but for the greater part of his life had resided & carried on business in New Zealand, where by far the greater part of his estate was situated. In his will he described himself as " of C., New Zealand, but now residing in London " ; & provision was made therein for the distribution of the corpus of his estate in New Zealand, the income being in the main applied for payments of annuities in England. Pltf., a child of testator, residing in England, applied to have provision made for her out of the estate :—Held : the ct. had jurisdiction to order, under the Family Protection Act, 1908, that provision be made for pltf. out of the estate, both as to movable or immovable property, & the circumstances that pltf. was residing in England did not detract from such jurisdiction.—Re ROPER, [1927] N. Z. L. R. 731.—N.Z.

g. —— Discretion of court—Whether interfered with.]—New Zealand Family Protection Act, Part II. (No.

60 of 1908), s. 33 (1), provides that in cases where any person dies leaving a will without making adequate provision therein for the proper maintenance & support of testator's wife, husband, or children the ct. may, at its discretion, order that such provision as it thinks fit should be made out of the estate of testator for such wife, husband, or children.

The ct. below having exercised its discretion in favour of three married daughters of testator by a wife who had divorced him, his will disposing of all his estate in favour of his second wife & her children, their Lordships declined to interfere; & approved the general view taken by the ct. below as to the proper scope & application of the powers conferred by the Act.—ALLARDICE v. ALLARDICE, [1911] A. C. 730, P. C.—N.Z.

h. —— Principles to be applied.] On an application by a widow under Testator's Family Maintenance Act for relief because proper provision was not made for her under her husband's will, the enquiry should be, what is the need of maintenance & support, & what property has testator left, & there must be considered the station in life of the parties, the age, health & general circumstances of the wife, the means possessed by testator at his death, the means possessed by the widow in her own right. The ct. should, so far as possible place itself in all respects in the position of testator & consider whether or not, having regard to all surrounding circumstances, testator has been guilty of a manifest breach of a moral duty owed to his wife & if there has been that breach, repair it.—Re LIVINGSTON, [1923] 1 D. L. R. 1167; 31 B. C. R. 468; [1923] 1 W. W. R. 628.—CAN.

k. —— Each case governed by its circumstances.]—On an application for relief under Testator's Family Maintenance Act, (B. C.), 1924, the ct. has no power to redraw the will & dispose of the estate as it may think right & just. Each case must be governed by its circumstances.—Re TESTATOR'S FAMILY MAINTENANCE ACT, Re ELWORTHY ESTATE, ELWORTHY & HALE, [1928] 2 D. L. R. 421; [1928] 1 W. W. R. 737; 39 B. C. l. —— Scope & application of powers conferred by Act.]—ALLARDICE v. ALLARDICE, [1911] A. C. 730, P. C.—N.Z.

m. —— Material date in determining need of maintenance.]—In an application under Testator's Family Maintenance & Guardianship of Infants Act, 1916, s. 3, the period of time which is to be considered when determining whether the applicant has been left without adequate provision is the date on which the ct. is dealing with the matter, & not the date of testator's death.—Re FORSAITH, 26 S. R. N. S. W. 613; 43 N. S. W. W. N. 171.—AUS.

n. —— Testatrix married three times—Will leaving estate to child by second husband—Claim for maintenance by daughters of first marriage.]—A testator was married three times. The applicants were her daughters by the first marriage. She had one daughter by her second marriage. By her will she gave all her property, which amounted to about £7,500, & which had been wholly derived from her second husband, to the daughter by the second marriage. The applicants applied for maintenance under Testator's Family Maintenance Act, 1914:—Held: they should be allowed some maintenance.—Re HOFNER, [1925] St. R. Qd. 232.—AUS.

o. —— Who entitled to relief—Widow.]—Where a testator domiciled in Alta., at the time of his death disposes of all his property, including immovables in both Alta. & Sask., making no provision for his widow, the cts. of Sask., may entertain an application by the widow for relief under Devolution of Estates Act with regard to the immovables situated within that province.—Re OSTANDER ESTATE (1915), 30 W. q. —— —— —— Or widower.]—There is no difference between the application of a widower & that of a widow under Testator's Family Maintenance Act, for an adequate provision out of the estate in question.—Re STIGINGS (1924), 34 B. C. R. 347.—CAN.

r. —— —— —— After remarriage.]—Testator by his will made provision for the maintenance & support of his wife for her life so long as she remained a widow. She remarried, & thereafter applied under Family Protection Act, 1908, for provision to be made out of the estate for her maintenance & support:—Held: by her remarriage pltf. had lost her status of "widow" of testator as required by the Act & by the terms of the gift, & was not entitled to an allowance.—NEWMAN v. NEWMAN, [1927] N. Z. L. R. 418.—N.Z.

t. —— —— Child legally adopted in foreign country where child & adoptive parents domiciled.]—A child legally adopted in a foreign country where the child & adoptive parents were then domiciled held entitled to the benefits of Testator's Family Maintenance Act (B. C.), 1924, with respect to the estate of one of such parents who died domiciled in B. C., even though the child had always been an alien domiciled in the foreign country.—Re MCADAM (B. C.), [1925] 4 D. L. R. 138; [1925] 2 W. W. R. 593.—CAN.

a. —— —— Married daughter—No support from parents.]—The fact that a child who claims the benefits of Testator's Family Maintenance Act (B. C.), 1924, has been married for a number of years & has not been supported by either of its parents since its marriage does not disentitle it to such benefits.—Re MCADAM (B. C.), [1925] 4 D. L. R. 138; [1925] 2 W. W. R. 593.—CAN.

b. —— —— —— By divorced wife.]—ALLARDICE v. ALLARDICE, [1911] A. C. 730, P. C.—N.Z.

C.), 1924, on behalf of a daughter who was earning her own living, dismissed.—Re TESTATOR'S FAMILY MAINTENANCE ACT, Re ELWORTHY ESTATE, ELWORTHY & HALE, [1928] 2 D. L. R. 421; [1928] 1 W. W. R. 737; 39 B. C. R. 474.—CAN.

d. —— Amount allowed—Each case dependant on own circumstances.]—No set rule can be laid down as to the amount which should be allowed to a person entitled to the benefits of Testator's Family Maintenance Act (B. C.), 1924; each case must depend on its own circumstances & be left to judicial discretion.—Re MCADAM (B.C.), [1925] 4 D. L. R. 138; [1925] 2 W. W. R. 593.—CAN.

e. —— ——.]—Widow's Relief Act does not contemplate the arbitrary fixing of a sum which the widow should necessarily receive of the date of her application, but rather the realising of the share in the estate which she would be entitled to under an intestate administration, when all questions of the assets & liabilities have been disposed of.—Re MCINTYRE (Alta.), [1925] 3 W. W. R. 172.—CAN.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Contract applicable to mental as well as bodily labour.]—A. was employed by B. to devise a method of curving metal tubing for the purpose of manufacturing lifebuoys, of which B. was patentee:—Held: A. might recover compensation for the labour & skill, & also the value of the materials, employed by him in the course of the work, under a count for work & labour & materials.

Pltf. is as much entitled to recover in respect of the application of his skill & scientific knowledge, as he would have been for mere manual work & labour (TINDAL, C.J.).—GRAFTON v. ARMITAGE (1845), 2 C. B. 336; 15 L. J. C. P. 20; 6 L. T. O. S. 152; 9 Jur. 1039; 135 E. R. 975.

2. Distinguished from contract for sale.]—"If you employ a man to build a house on your land, or to make a chattel with your materials, the party who does the work has no power to appropriate the produce of his labour & your materials to any other person. Having bestowed his labour at your request on your materials, he may maintain an action against you for work & labour. But if you employ another to work up his own materials in making a chattel, then he may appropriate the produce of that labour & materials to any other person. No right to maintain any action vests in him during the progress of the work; but when the chattel has assumed the character bargained for, & the employer accepted it, the party employed may maintain an action for goods sold & delivered; or if the employer refuses to accept, a special action on the case for such refusal. But he cannot maintain an action for work & labour, because his labour was bestowed on his own materials & for himself, & not for the person who employed him" (BAYLEY, J.).—ATKINSON v. BELL (1828), 8 B. & C. 277; Dan. & Ll. 93; 2 Man. & Ry. 11. ——.]—Pltf. had been employed by a local board of health to construct certain main sewer works. On Mar. 19, 1866, the local board gave notice to the owners of certain houses to connect their house drains with the main sewer within twenty-one days: Before the expiration of the twenty-one days, & during the construction of the main sewer the surveyor of the board proposed to pltf. that he, pltf., should construct the connection between the house drains & the main sewer. Pltf. said he was willing to do the work if the board would see him paid. The owners of the houses did not proceed in any way to do the work required of them, & before the expiration of the twenty-one days the construction of the connections was commenced by pltf. under the following circumstances: Having completed the main sewer, pltf. was leaving the work when the surveyor stopped him & requested him not to go away as there was more work to be done. Pltf. asked him who was to be responsible for the payment, to which the surveyor answered that deft., who was the chairman of the local board was waiting to see pltf. about it. Pltf. then had an interview with deft., at which deft. said: "What objection have you to making the connections?" Pltf. said, "I have none, if you or the board will order the work, or become responsible for the payment." Deft. said "Go on & do the work & I will see you paid." Accordingly, pltf. constructed & completed the connections. He afterwards applied to the local board for payment, but the local board disclaimed all responsibility on the ground that the board had never entered into any agreement with pltf. nor by any resolution or order authorised any officer of the board to agree with him for the performance of the work. Pltf. then commenced an action against deft.:—Held: that there was evidence to go to the jury of the personal liability of deft., & deft. was not entitled to have a nonsuit entered.—MOUNTSTEPHEN v. LAKEMAN (1871), L. 12. —— Primâ facie liability—When liability shifted.]—Primâ facie when one man employs another to do work, the employer is liable for it. But there are cases where the employer does not primâ facie create that liability: as where it is known that a third party is to receive the benefit of the work. When one man employs another for his own benefit, the rule of law may be applied, that a promise is implied, on his part, to pay. But where one person employs another, or proposes that another shall be employed, not for his own benefit, but for the benefit of third parties, then, to raise an implied promise on his part to pay, he must have led the other to understand, by words or conduct, that he was to be the paymaster (BYLES, J.).—CHIDLEY v. NORRIS (1862), 3 F. & F. 228.

13. Liability of party taking benefit of work done.]—The general principle is, beyond all question, that work & labour done or money expended, by one man to preserve or benefit the property of another do not according to English law create any lien upon the property saved or benefited, nor, even if standing alone, create any obligation to repay the expenditure (BOWEN, L.J.).—FALCKE v. SCOTTISH IMPERIAL INSURANCE CO. 23. —— Abandonment of enterprise.]—A contractor sent in a tender to a railway co. for the execution of part of the works, either with a double or single line of rails. He was informed, in writing, by the engineer of the co., that his tender was accepted, & that intimation was confirmed by the directors, upon his attendance at one of their board meetings, but no document accepting the tender was executed by the co. in such a manner as to be binding at law; nor was any conclusion ever come to whether there should be a single or a double line. The railway was afterwards abandoned, & the contractor then filed a bill seeking to have a binding contract executed by the co., or to recover from them the loss which he had sustained in preparing for the works:—Held: he had no claim to relief in equity upon the general merits of the case; & an allegation, unsupported by any additional facts, that the co. held money in their hands for the purpose of paying pltf., & were trustees of it for his benefit, under an instrument in writing, was not sufficient to sustain the bill.—JACKSON v. NORTH WALES RY. 29. Recovery on quantum meruit—Adequacy of services performed.]—Where pltf. declares upon a quantum meruit for work & labour done, & materials found, it is competent to deft., even without notice to pltf., to prove that the work done was not worth so much as pltf. claims; & if it appear that pltf. has been paid on account as much as the work was worth, he cannot recover; & so it seems that deft. may be let into such a defence where the contract was for the work to be done at a certain price; at least if he give pltf. previous notice of such defence, that he may be prepared to meet it; &, qu.: if the work done be wholly inadequate to answer the purpose for which it was undertaken to be performed, whether deft. may not be let into such defence even without notice.—BASTEN v. BUTTER (1806), 7 East, 479; 3 Smith, K. 35. —— Action by administrator.]—A. declared as administrator of B., stating that deft., in B.'s lifetime, was indebted to B. in money to be paid by deft. to B. on request. It was proved that B. had contracted with deft., in writing, to do certain works for him for £400 to be paid upon completion of the works; B. died before their completion; & A. before he had taken out letters of administration, agreed with deft. to complete, & did complete, the works:—Held: these facts did not support the declaration, inasmuch as, the contract being entire, & the works unfinished at B.'s death no debt accrued from deft. to B. in B.'s lifetime: although the new agreement with A. amounted, as between him & deft., to a rescinding of the original contract, which would entitle A., as administrator, to sue on a quantum meruit in respect of the work done by B.—CROSTHWAITE v. GARDNER (1852), 18 Q. Before the time for completing the fittings, B. repudiated the contract, & refused to take the ship. Previous to this refusal, A. had done extras to the ship, at B.'s desire. A. did not go on with the fittings, but sold the ship, & brought his action against B. for the loss upon the sale. In his declaration he averred, that the ship was fitted "according to the form & effect of the agreement," & also, that it was ready for delivery at the proper time:—Held: he could not recover on the special contract, nor for the extras, on the count for work & labour.

If you had not sold the vessel you would have been entitled to recover for the extras; but, by selling, you have put an end to the contract (BEST, C.J.).—PARMETER v. BURRELL (1827), 3 C. & P. 144; 172 E. R. 361, N.P.

40. Payment on production of certificate of third person.]—In an action brought on an agreement to pay money for work to be done, on the production of the certificate of a third person that he approved the work, the declaration also having the common counts, pltf. produced, on the trial a bill of charges for the work done, which had been submitted to such third person, who, it was proved, had attended the progress of the work, under which he had written & signed the following memorandum, "on examining the annexed bill, & considering the circumstances of the case referred to me, I am of opinion that a reduction should be made of £12 11*s.* 2*d.*"; but that person being afterwards called as a witness for deft. stated that he never had approved the work, but disapproved it, & would not have signed a certificate of approval; the jury, on the whole case, found for pltf.:—Held: the verdict of the jury ought not to be disturbed under the circumstances; & therefore the ct. refused to make absolute a rule granted to show cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground that the action could not be maintained without proof of such certificate.—DE VILE v. ARNOLD (1822), 10 Price, 21; 147 E. 53. Sufficiency of evidence.]—In an action for work & labour pltf., who was an attorney, proved that he had rendered professional services for deft., as his agent, at a contested election for a seat in Parliament. It also appeared on pltf.'s evidence that pltf. had voted at the election for deft., although by law a paid agent is forbidden to vote. Deft. gave evidence to show that pltf. agreed to render his services gratuitously. The judge directed the jury that pltf. was entitled to a verdict, unless deft. made out to their satisfaction that the services were to be gratuitous :—Held : a misdirection, & the true question for the jury should have been, whether taking all the evidence together, pltf. had made out that he was to be paid for his services.—HINGESTON v. KELLY (1849), 18 L. 55. First clause in contract naming specific sum —Subsequent clause providing for additional payment — Repugnancy.] — Applt. contracted with resps. to carry out work in altering their restaurant. The contract by its first clause witnessed that in consideration of $3,000 payable by three instalments, applt. agreed to furnish the materials & perform the services stated in the contract. Details of the work followed, & there was a final clause to the effect that resps. were to pay to applt. the value of the materials provided & labour done, each at 12½ per cent. over cost, whether that value exceeded or was less than $3,000. The materials & labour considerably exceeded that sum, & applt. sued for a balance based upon the final clause:—Held: applt. was entitled to recover on that basis, since the first clause did not necessarily mean that the contract price was to be $3,000, & there was therefore no repugnancy between it & the final clause so as to make the first clause prevail.—FORBES v. GIT, [1922] 1 A. 63. Whether wages must be paid week by week.]—There is nothing in Corn Production Act, 1917 (c. 46), s. 4 (1), which enacts that the employer of a workman in agriculture "shall pay wages to the workman at a rate not less than the minimum rate as fixed under this Act," rendering it necessary to pay the wages week by week. Hence, Where resp., the employer, hired a labourer for twelve months at a certain sum per annum, with board & lodging, which gave a weekly average wage less than the minimum weekly rate fixed under the Act, & an information was preferred before the expiration of the year's hiring charging resp. that he did not pay wages to the labourer at a rate not less than the minimum rate as so fixed :—Held : no offence had been committed, as it could not be ascertained before the time of payment had arrived whether the minimum rate had been paid or not.—HAMPTON v. SMITH (1920), 89 L. By an order of the Agricultural Wages Committee for Monmouth dated July 4, 1925, the reckoning of any advantage or benefit as payment of wages in lieu of payment in cash for the purpose of the application of any minimum wages fixed by the committee was forbidden :—Held : (1) Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Act, 1924 (c. 37), s. 7 (2), does not displace the duty of the prosecution to make out a primâ facie case. For this purpose proof must be given of the age of the worker, so as to enable the ct. to decide whether the proper rate of wage under the Act had been paid or not. The burden of proof then shifts to the employer to show that he has paid wages at not less than the minimum rate; (2) in view of the Act & the order of the Agricultural Wages Committee referred to, no deduction from the worker's wage either by way of set-off or otherwise was permissible for the purpose of reckoning the minimum rate of wage applicable.—JONES v. HARRIS, [1927] 1 K. On informations against resp. for paying less than the minimum wages fixed in pursuance of Agricultural Wages (Regulation) Act, 1924 (c. 37), the justices, while finding on other grounds that the wages were less than the minimum, excluded the question of the supply of milk on the ground that the supply was in the nature of a sale. In the particular area there was in force an Order of the Agricultural Wages Committee, prescribing that no benefit. was to be reckoned as payment of wages in lieu of cash except a cottage or board & lodging :—Held : resp. had contravened the Order by deducting the price of the milk from the man's wages.—HAYES v. CURTIS (1928), 139 L. Applt., one of the workers in respect of whom the trade board had fixed minimum wages, had been employed for over three years, & was employed, with thirty other women, by resps., who were fishermen & owners of fishing boats, in mending drift nets, which were exclusively the property of resps. & were only used by them in their business : —Held : the Trade Boards Acts applied to workers in a "specified trade" by whomsoever they were employed, if their employment was regular & for commercial purposes, & not only to workers employed in a "specified trade" by an employer who was solely engaged in the same trade, &, resps. were bound to pay to applt. the minimum wage fixed by the trade board for workers of her class in her branch of industry.—SKINNER v. JACK BREACH, LTD., [1927] 2 K. The schedule to the Order provided that the rates were to apply to all male workers who were "engaged during the whole or any part of their time" in any branch of the ready made & wholesale bespoke tailoring trade which is engaged in making garments to be worn by male persons, but that they should not apply to "persons engaged merely as clerks, messengers . . . & to others whose work stands in a relationship to the trade similar to that of the above excluded classes":—Held: where a worker is engaged for any substantial part of his time in work in the tailoring trade he is entitled to be paid at the minimum rate of wages for such part of his time, notwithstanding that he may be employed in other work for the rest of his time.—BOARD OF TRADE v. ROBERTS (1915), 85 L. Applt. was engaged as the working manager of a branch boot & shoe repairing shop belonging to the resps. During about half the time he was present at the shop he was actually engaged in repairing boots & shoes; during the remaining business hours he kept the books & accounts, sold goods by retail, had his meals & cleaned the shop & its fittings, as he was required to do by his agreement:—Held: in calculating the amount of the wages to which he was entitled, applt. was not to be deemed to have been employed in boot & shoe repairing "during all the time which he was present" as resps.' shop, within Trade Boards Act, 1918 (c. 32), s. 8, because during part of that time he was "so present for some purpose unconnected with his work & other than that of waiting for work to be given to him to perform."—FRANCE v. COOMBES (J.) & Co., [1928] 2 K. Draft order extending scope of insurable persons—Power of commissioner holding inquiry relating thereto.]—The Board of Trade made a draft special Order extending National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), Part II., to "workmen in the trade of sawmilling, including machine woodwork, whether carried on in connection with any other insured trade or not" ; & upon objection being made appointed a competent & impartial person ; to inquire & report thereon. The Comr. was of opinion that the draft Order was ultra vires the Board of Trade upon the ground that sawmilling was already included by clause 7 of the Sixth Schedule in the list of insured trades, & that therefore the Order did not extend the provisions of Part II. of the Act to workmen "in any trade other than an insured trade" within the meaning of sect. 103, & that he ought to report that upon that ground the Order should not be made :—Held : a mandamus must issue to the Comr. to hear & determine the matter of the inquiry according to law upon the grounds (1) that he had no jurisdiction to decide that the Order was ultra vires the Board of Trade, his only duty being to report whether it was desirable ; (2) that the Order upon its true construction only extended Part II. of the Act to workmen in the trade of sawmilling not carried on in connection with any other insured trade, which was, within the meaning of sect. 103 and the Sixth Schedule, a different trade from the sawmilling included as an insured trade in clause 7 of the schedule, & the Order was not ultra vires.—R. v. HUDSON, [1915] 1 K. A. "Domestic Service."

See Unemployment Insurance Acts, 1920–1928.

83. Meaning of "domestic servant"—General rule.]—The Junior Carlton Club employed upon their premises in Pall Mall persons who served in the following capacities, cashier, billiard marker, commissionaire, wine butler, house porter, hall porter, housekeeper, coffee-room superintendent, engineer, waiters, cooks & housemaids :—Held : these servants were persons engaged in domestic service, within the exception contained in Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (c. 30), Sched. I., Part II. (b), & were not liable to the obligations, or entitled to the benefits of the Act.

Semble : domestic servants are servants whose main or general function it is to be about their employers' persons, or their establishments, residential or quasi-residential, for the purposes of ministering to their employer's needs or wants, or to the needs or wants of those who are members of their establishments, or of those resorting to such establishments, including guests.—Re JUNIOR CARLTON CLUB, [1922] 1 K. I., Part II., of the Act, are excepted from the provisions of the Act as to insurance against unemployment. Sched. I., Part II., includes amongst such persons those engaged in (a) employment in agriculture, including horticulture, & (b) employment in domestic service:—Held: a golf greenkeeper, as being a gardener engaged in horticulture, & a dairymaid, were persons engaged in employment in agriculture, but that the driver of a farmer's motor lorry taking farm produce to market & bringing back manure was not; the following were engaged in employment in domestic service: a huntsman of a pack of foxhounds & the whippers-in & kennelman, a stoker employed exclusively at a large college to light & stoke the fires of an engine driving a dynamo supplying light & heat to the college, a museum attendant, a hospital porter, a lodgekeeper, a gamekeeper, a river keeper under a private employer, a trainer of greyhounds in private employment, & a dairymaid, as well as in agriculture; but the following were not so engaged: a private secretary, a painter employed exclusively by a large college, & a cobbler employed exclusively by a school to mend the boots of the inmates.—Re VELLACOTT, [1922] 1 K. 108. —— Matron of preparatory school.]—Certain persons were employed at a private preparatory boarding school for boys, namely, a matron, lady housekeeper, cook, pantrymaid, dormitory maid & head laundryman. The matron was a trained nurse, & the lady housekeeper taught English for two hours a week, but with those exceptions all the persons were solely & wholly employed in normal domestic service. There was evidence that the main purpose of the proprietors of the school was to carry on the profession of schoolmasters, the profits being made on the fees charged for tuition, & that no gain or profit was sought or expected to be made out of the boarding & lodging of the boys, which were merely ancillary to the main purpose of the school:—Held: the employment of the persons above mentioned was not such as to make them " employed persons " within Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (c. 30), as the boarding & lodging of the pupils were subsidiary to their general training, nurture & education, & that no distinction could be drawn in this respect between public schools & private preparatory schools, & the persons above mentioned were domestic servants & were not employed in a trade or business carried on for the purpose of gain within the meaning of that Act.—Re NORTH & INGRAM, [1922] 1 K. 111. —— —— Butler & cook in school boarding house.]—Rugby School, which was one of the great public schools of England, was controlled by, & its property was vested in, a governing body. The staff of the school included the headmaster & assistant masters, who rendered professional services as teachers for which they received fixed salaries from the governing body. The headmaster & several of the assistant masters also conducted boarding houses let to them by the governing body, in which they boarded & tutored pupils of the school in consideration of a boarding fee regulated by the governing body & payment for extra disbursements. The contract for the education & board of the pupil was made between the governing body & the parent of the pupil. At the end of each term the governing body on receiving from the parents the amounts due from them which covered the education, board, & extras of the pupils, paid to the house master a sum which included the boarding fee & extras of each of the pupils in his house. The amount payable to the house master was such a sum as should repay to him his estimated outlay on board & extra cost in the management of the house. The balance retained by the governing body was such a sum only as was required for supplementing the endowment income of the school for the purpose of paying its running expenses. The remuneration of the house master from the boarding house depended upon the amount of the boarding fee, the cost of commodities, & his own management; but by good management he expected to make some profit by keeping the house & undertaking the increase of work involved in so doing.

Brigg public school was a grant aided secondary school controlled by a governing body. Its income was derived from the fees of scholars, grants from the Board of Education & the county council, & an endowment. The headmaster was given & carried on a boarding house for scholars at the school. The boarding fees were fixed by the said governing body, board, & council. From the total fees payable to the governing body by the parents of the pupils the sum allowed for boarding was deducted & paid to the headmaster. The fees fixed for boarding were £40 a year for boys over twelve & somewhat less for boys under that age. The school terms aggregated thirty-nine weeks in the year. The headmaster was responsible for making the fees for boarding cover the cost & any deficiency was borne by him.

At Rugby School a butler was employed by the headmaster in the boarding house kept by him; a cook was employed by an assistant master in the boarding house kept by him; & a school cleaner, who did not reside on the school premises, was employed by the governing body to clean the class rooms. At Brigg School a cook was employed by the headmaster in the boarding house kept by him:—Held: the employment of each of these servants, including that of the school cleaner, was an employment in "domestic service" within Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (c. 30), Sched. I., Part II. (C); none of these servants was employed in a "trade or business carried on for the purposes of gain" within the meaning of that clause; it was not necessary that any of them should be insured against unemployment under the Act.—Re DAVID, Re BRYANT, [1922] 1 K. 133. Payment of contributions—Return of insurance cards by employer—Cards posted but lost in post—Loss of employment by contributor.]—Pltf. had been in deft.'s employment as a scaffolder, & during the period of such employment he was insured under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), his insurance cards being left in the custody of deft. By the Regulations made under the Act the employer is required upon the termination of the employment to return any card in his possession to the contributor. Owing to pltf. being ill & having to go into hospital, his employment by deft. terminated. Three weeks later deft. posted the cards to pltf. at the address given on them. The cards were lost in the post. On leaving hospital pltf. for two weeks failed to get employment in consequence of his inability to produce his cards. On a claim for damages for the two weeks' loss of employment :—Held : the claim could not be maintained upon the ground that (1) (RIDLEY & PICKFORD, JJ.) assuming deft. had been guilty of a breach of his statutory duty to return the cards, pltf.'s failure to get employment was not the natural consequence of that breach ; (2) (AVORY, J.) the Post Office was the agent of the Insurance Comrs., whose property the cards were, to receive the return of the cards, & deft. having posted the cards had returned them to the contributor within the meaning of the Regulations.—PRICE v. WEBB, [1913] 2 K. 134. —— Whether presentation of insurance book by workman condition precedent.]—Applts. were summoned under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 101 (2), for employing a workman in an insured trade, to wit, the trade of a fitter, without having paid the contribution required by the statute. They carried on a coal-mining business, & they engaged men who were fitters by trade to keep the plant & machinery in repair ; & they had on their colliery premises a colliery workshop to which machines & plant could be taken for repair. The workman, a fitter by trade, was employed as a fitter by applts. for maintaining & repairing the plant & machinery, & during his employment he was engaged sometimes in the workshop & sometimes outside in maintaining & repairing the machines & plant. One of the insured trades is mechanical engineering, & an umpire had held that smiths & mechanics & their assistants employed wholly or mainly in workshops, & engaged in the maintenance or repair of colliery machinery were within the Act. e. Who is an "employer" — Employment of assistant by van driver employed by baker at weekly wage—Van driver ordering & paying for bread & taking profits.]—A baker employed a van driver, & paid him weekly wages. The van driver was an insured person under Unemployment Insurance Acts, 1920. Each night before going home, the van driver, according to the custom of the bakery trade, made an estimate of the bread that he would require on the following day, & left an order for that quantity with the baker's shop assistants. He paid for the bread before he took it out in the baker's

136. Summary proceedings — Jurisdiction of justices.]—In summary proceedings under Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (c. 30), & National Health Insurance Act, 1924 (c. 38), justices have no jurisdiction to determine the question whether a person is or was an employed person or is or was the employed of an employer contributor. If such a question arises & the decision of it becomes necessary, the justices must refer it to the appropriate Minister under Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920 (c. 30), s. 22 (7) or National Health Insurance Act, 1924 (c. 38), s. 97 (4), & must adjourn the hearing pending his decision.—WOOD v. BURKE (1927), 91 J. 140. Persons compulsorily insured — "Outworkers"—Master tailors.]—Master tailors who make up & finish garments for merchant tailors or wholesale clothing manufacturers, the work being done at the house or other premises of the master tailors, are employed as outworkers within National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), Sched. I., Part I (c), & persons engaged as such are "employed contributors" within sect. 1 of the Act unless they come within the exceptions in Part II., of Sched. I., or are exempted by the Insurance Comrs.—Re MASTER TAILORS AS OUTWORKERS (1913), 29 T. L. R. 725.

141. —— Bricklayer's labourer—Employed as general colliery labourer.]—A workman who had been a bricklayer's labourer was employed by resp. as a general colliery labourer, & not as a bricklayer's labourer. During most of his time he was engaged in breaking up material for the making of concrete & in making concrete which was used in the alteration of a fan house at the colliery. Two bricklayers & their labourers were employed on the airdrift, & the workman said he took orders from one of these men. The employer was summoned under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 101 (2), for employing a workman in an insured trade, namely, the trade of building or of bricklayer's or builders labourer, without paying unemployment contributions in respect of the workman ; & it was contended in support of the summons that as the material broken up by the workman & made into concrete was used in the construction of a colliery fan house & airdrift, he van, the use of which he was allowed, & dealt with the bread as he pleased. Although paid weekly wages by the baker, he also made the usual profit on the bread sold by him. He, the van driver, employed a boy as an assistant, according to the custom that had recently arisen in the trade, & paid him the recognised rate of wages per week. The baker was aware that the van driver had employed this boy, but never interfered with the boy, or gave him any directions :—Held: the van driver, & not the baker, was the "employer" of the boy within Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920.—M'ARTHUR v. MINISTER FOR INDUSTRY & COMMERCE, [1928] I. 1. Persons compulsorily insured — Pupil teachers & monitors in national schools.]—The employment of pupil teachers & monitors in national schools in Ireland is an employment within National Insurance Act, 1911, & the Comrs. of National Education are the employers. It is not a contract of apprenticeship, because an essential element of apprenticeship, the right to receive instruction, is absent from the contract ; but is a contract of service within National Insurance Act, 1911, Part I., s. 1 (1).—Re PUPIL TEACHERS & MONITORS, [1913] 1 I. was employed wholly or mainly in the construction or maintenance, or repair of colliery offices, workshops, etc., & so came within one of the insured trades & a previous decision of the umpire :—Held : the workman was employed in an insured trade—that is, in the building trade, as interpreted by the umpire—& resp. ought to have been convicted.—ROBINSON v. 142. — Man engaged by "yard foreman."]—Resp. who was a coal dealer, for the purpose of carrying out the loading & unloading of coal at his yard employed a person described as a "yard foreman," & paid him weekly at a fixed rate per ton of coal handled. Further assistance being required in the yard, the foreman, on the instructions of resp., engaged some other men. Each week the foreman received from resp. the total amount due at the fixed rate per ton, & he divided it in equal shares between himself & the other men employed. If the foreman desired to stay away he obtained permission from resp., & one of the other men received the money & shared it with the others. Resp. had the supervision of the work of loading & unloading & generally the right to exercise control over the men in the performance of their duties. Complaints as to the work were in practice addressed to the foreman, who engaged & dismissed the men. Resp. had the right to require the foreman to dismiss a particular man if his work was unsatisfactory :—Held : the men were employed by resp. within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), & not by the foreman. —HILL v. BECKETT, (1915), 1 K. B. 578 ; 84 L. J. K. B. 458 ; 112 L. T. 505 ; 79 J. P. 190 ; 13 L. G. R. 530, D. C.

143. Exemptions—"Employment otherwise than by way of manual labour"—Dairymen's foremen.]—By National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 1 (1), all persons of the age of sixteen & upwards who are employed must be insured with certain exceptions. In the 2nd schedule (g) employment otherwise than by way of manual labour & at the rate of remuneration exceeding in value £160 a year is excepted. The comrs. under sect. 66 of the Act referred to the ct. the question whether dairymen's foremen & tailors' cutters who received more than £160 per annum were within the Act. :—Held : (1) though dairymen's foremen might perform manual labour the question was whether that was the real substantial employment for which they were engaged or whether it was not incidental or accessory to it. Even if assisting to lift churns was incidental to the employment such labour was not the labour for which they were substantially engaged, which was that of branch managers ; the dairymen's foremen were not within the Act.

(2) As to tailor's cutter the actual labour of cutting out cloth might be manual labour, but the position he really occupied was that of a manager of a business department. His duties were therefore, substantially not those involving manual labour.—Held : tailors' cutters receiving more than £160 per annum are not within the Act.—Re DAIRYMEN'S FOREMEN, Re TAILORS' CUTTERS (1912), 107 L. (g) in Part II, of sched 1, of the Act as being employed "otherwise than by way of manual labour" :—Held : neither lithographic artists nor engravers, though they used their hands in their work could be said to be engaged in manual labour & they were, therefore, not within the Act.—Re NATIONAL INSURANCE ACT,

n. —— —— Pilots licenced by harbour commissioners.]—Under a local Act, the W. Port & Harbour Act, 1853, applts. the Port & Harbour Comrs. of W. were empowered at discretion to appoint & licence qualified persons to act as pilots, with power at discretion to remove such licenced pilots & appoint & licence new pilots & to suspend a licence. Power to fine the licenced pilots in certain cases was conferred upon applts. & when that power was exercised the fine was placed in the general harbour fund. The statute forbade pilotage except by duly licenced pilots, & made pilotage compulsory on all vessels using the port, subject, on breach of this latter provision, to payment by the master, etc., of a vessel to the proper officer of applts. double pilotage. Applts. were empowered to charge & receive & recover, as & for pilotage rates, the sums specified by the Act ; & to reduce, abate, or abolish such rates at discretion ; & to make bye-laws or rules regulating the condition of pilotage. All rates, tolls, or charges under the statute were made applicable at the discretion of applts. to general harbour purposes. No rule or bye-law regulating pilotage was proved. The practice of the applts. for an indefinite period of time, extending over at least 30 years, had been to receive the pilotage rates, to pool the sum so received, & pay out the same quarterly in equal shares to the five licenced pilots of the port :—Held : the pilots appointed & licenced by applts. were not employees of or under applts., & the latter were not liable to contribute to insurance of the pilots under National Insurance Acts, 1911–1913.—WESTPORT PORT & HARBOUR COMRS. v. IRISH INSURANCE COMRS., [1915] 2 I. 148. Curates of Church of England.]—In order to make insurance obligatory under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), Part I., there must be something in the nature of a contract of service.

The position of a curate in the Church of England, whether he is formally licenced by the bishop under seal or is a mere probationer under the bishop's temporary permission, is that of a person who holds an ecclesiastical office, & not the position of a person whose duties & rights are defined by contract. Therefore the relation between the incumbent & the curate, or the bishop & the curate, is not the relation of employer & employed, & the curate is not compulsorily insurable under the Act.

The tierers were paid their wages & kept such hours as were prescribed by the workman who had engaged them, & their admission to or departure from the works was in no way controlled by resps., but the workman could at any time dispense with the services of his tierer, though resps. alone could dismiss her from the premises. The tierers were sometimes asked by the shop foreman to do other things. Resps. were summoned for not having paid the employers' contribution of a tierer payable under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), & the justices finding that the tierer was not "employed" by, or "under the general control & management" of resps. dismissed the summons:—Held: the question was one of fact for the justices, &, having regard to their findings, there was no ground for saying that their decision was wrong in law.—NEWELL v. KING (1913), 110 L. National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), came into force on July 15, 1912 :—Held : assuming the Joint Committee & the Insurance Comrs. were not a Govt. department, & consequently were not a rule making authority as defined by Rules Publication Act, 1893 (c. 66), & they therefore had no power by certifying urgency to bring the regulations into operation on May 22, 1912, the regulations had been duly made under the powers conferred by National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), ss. 7, 65, & clause 5 (c) of the National Insurance (Joint Committee) Regulations, 1912, & were, as from the date when the Act came into force, valid & enforceable regulations.

(2) The failure of an employer to pay a contribution in respect of an employed contributor is under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 69 (2), an offence punishable on summary conviction, & a conviction is not bad because it orders deft. both to pay a fine & to pay to the Insurance Comrs. a sum equal to the amount of the contributions which deft. has failed to pay.

158. Expulsion of member—For immoral conduct.]—An approved society under National Insurance (Health) Acts made a rule, No. 18 (1), under which the committee of management had power to terminate the membership of any member for (inter alia) "immoral conduct or other serious personal misconduct," the person so ceasing to be a member being entitled to have his transfer value transferred to any other society he might join. One of the members of the society, who was an unmarried woman, became pregnant, & on this fact becoming known to the society, the committee passed a resolution to terminate her membership of the society on the ground of "immoral conduct or other serious personal misconduct." She appealed against that decision, & the appeal was referred to a referee to hear & determine, who stated a case for the opinion of the ct. :—Held : (1) the status of membership was quite separate & distinct from the right to benefits, & an approved society was entitled to make a rule to expel a member on the ground of immoral conduct even though the result of the expulsion was to deprive that member of future contingent benefits which she might have received had she remained a member of the society, but the society could not make a rule which would deprive a member of accrued benefits to which she would but for that provision have been entitled ; (2) the referee was not bound by the decision of the committee of management but was entitled to come to his own conclusion on the evidence before him ; (3) the provisions of r. 18 (1), were not ultra vires ; (4) the society in the case of expulsion was not bound to do more than hand the transfer value to applt. or her agent ; (5) the onus of proving that applt. had been deprived of benefits lay upon her & not upon the society.—SUTTON v. NEW TABERNACLE SOCIETY, [1924] 1 K. 163. Dispute between approved society & member -Jurisdiction of court to interfere.]—A rule of an approved society under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), provided that "an insured member shall send notice of illness to the secretary, in the form required by the ct., as soon as possible after the commencement of the illness, whether he is entitled to claim benefit in respect of the illness or not, & shall not be entitled to sickness benefit, until he has sent to the secretary a declaration of incapacity for work in the form required, & a medical certificate or other sufficient evidence of incapacity & the cause thereof." Subsequently the society passed a resolution that "in every instance a certificate from a panel doctor must be sent."

Pltf., a member of the society, was refused sickness benefit on the ground that he had sent in a certificate from the doctor who had in fact attended him in his illness, who was not a panel doctor, & had not sent in a certificate from a panel doctor. Pltf. thereupon sued the society, claiming a declaration that the resolution was illegal & ultra vires :—Held : the resolution was illegal & ultra vires, & as the matter was not one of domestic administration which under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 67, ought to go to arbn., pltf. was entitled to the declaration sought.—HEARD v. PICKTHORNE, [1913] 3 K. 164. ·.]—The rules of an approved society under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), provided, with regard to sickness & disablement benefits, that "an illness shall not be deemed to commence or continue unless the member is rendered incapable of work by some specific disease or by bodily or mental disablement," & that "an insured member shall send notice of illness to the local secretary of the society . . . & shall not be entitled to sickness benefit until he has sent to the local secretary . . . a medical certificate or other sufficient evidence of incapacity & the cause thereof." A further rule provided that disputes arising between an insured member & the society should be decided by the general delegates' meeting. Pltf., a member of the society, sent in a claim for sickness benefit accompanied by a medical certificate which stated that she was "suffering from debility & unable to work." The society requested that the certificate should be amended by the cause of the debility being stated, & as this request was not complied with the society refused to pay pltf. sickness benefit. Pltf. thereupon sued the society, claiming, first, an injunction to restrain them from refusing to accept & consider as evidence of her claim to sickness benefit the medical certificate she had sent, &, secondly, a sum in respect of sickness benefit :—Held : the ct. had no jurisdiction to entertain the action inasmuch as the matter was a dispute within National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 67, & must be decided by the tribunal set up by the society's rules.—BAILEY v.

A deficiency having occurred in the drug fund formed for the borough of Leicester under the National Health Insurance Acts, the pharmaceutical committee, communicated with the panel committee, requesting that all cases of doctors who had ordered more drugs than the average prescribed by the doctors on the panel should be investigated. The panel committee advised the insurance committee to make a surcharge upon those doctors who had exceeded the average. They did not find that any orders given by any practitioner or practitioners had been excessive; but, the judge held, the basis of their decision was that the deficiency in the drug fund would best be made up by contributions from the doctors in question: —Held: in these circumstances there had been no proceeding under Regulation 40, & the surcharge had been wrongfully imposed.—MOORE v. LEICESTER INSURANCE COMMITTEE (1915), 85 L. 168. —— Removal of practitioner from panel—Refusal to supply prescriptions in duplicate.]—A medical practitioner, S., was placed on the panel list of doctors under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), in 1913, & signed an agreement with the County of London Insurance Committee. By one of the clauses of the agreement it was provided: "The practitioner shall order in the form prescribed . . . such drugs & prescribed appliances as are requisite for the treatment of any patient." In pursuance of this clause the insurance committee supplied S. with books of forms for medical prescriptions containing carbon sheets so that the orders for drugs & medicines might be given in duplicate. The duplicate forms were for the convenience of the panel chemist, who might keep a copy of the prescriptions. S. refused to make out the forms in duplicate, contending that it was outside the terms of his engagement that he should do the work of a clerk to the chemist. The insurance committee drew the attention of S. to the matter in July, 1913, but he declined to alter his practice. In Sept. 1913, the committee were authorised under provisional regulations to revise the medical list, & they sent out a circular letter giving notice of their intention to vary the terms of the agreements made between themselves & the medical practitioners, but gave no indication of the nature of the proposed variations. It was admitted that this was not a good notice under the agreements. In Dec. 1913, a form of agreement was sent to S. which provided (inter alia); "The practitioner shall order in duplicate on the form provided, etc." S. struck out the words "in duplicate" & signed the agreement, at the same time informing the committee that he was prepared to make use of duplicating books or forms, provided the filling up of the same did not involve more time & labour than the filling up of single slips. The committee thereupon erased the name of S. from the panel of doctors, & S. obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the committee to reinstate his name on the panel:—Held: S. had entered into a binding agreement with the committee for a period of service which could only be terminated by his own withdrawal or after an inquiry had been made into any alleged default on his part; he had done nothing by which he had lost his right not to be removed without an inquiry under National Insurance Act, 1911 (c. 55), s. 15; & the insurance committee had no power, under the circumstances, to remove his name from the panel.—R. v. COUNTY OF LONDON INSURANCE COMMITTEE, Ex p. SALTER (1914), 111 L. 169. —— Action by practitioner against insurance committee—Stay under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 27.]—By an agreement between a medical practitioner on the panel & the insurance committee of a county, which came into force on Jan. 12, 1914, the practitioner agreed to give medical treatment to insured persons, & by clause 1 the National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, were incorporated. By clause 14, "any dispute or question arising between the committee & the practitioner . . . relating to the construction of this agreement or the rights & liabilities of the committee or the practitioner . . . hereunder shall be referred to the Comrs." By Regulation 51 of the regulations: "Where under the provisions of these regulations or of any agreement made between the committee & a practitioner on the panel . . . any question arising between the committee & the practitioner . . . is referred, or any appeal from a decision of the commitee is made to the Comrs. the Comrs. shall determine, such questions or appeal in such manner as they think fit, & if in the opinion of the Comrs. a hearing is required they may authorise any two or more of the Comrs. to hear & determine such question or appeal, & any decision of the Comrs., or any of them made under this article shall be final & conclusive."

A dispute having arisen under the agreement, the practitioners brought an action against the committee in respect thereof, & the committee applied under above Act, sect. 4, to stay the action. The judge in chambers held, that there was no "submission" to arbn. as defined by above Act, sect. 27, & upon this ground refused to stay the action. No question as to the exercise of discretion arose:—Held: the appeal must be allowed & the action stayed upon the ground that there was a "submission" to arbn. within sect. 27.—CLEMENTS v. COUNTY OF DEVON INSURANCE COMMITTEE, [1918] 1 K.
